John Crampton came to Sawston nearly 50 years ago where has developed the printing, publishing and mineral water business of Messrs Crampton and Son Ltd. A branch of the mineral water business has also been established at Newmarket. He was one of the promoters of the Eastern Counties Leather and Parchment Company as well as a councillor, Visitor of Fulbourn Asylum and member of the Old Age Pensions Committee. His death has caused a blank in the village life and on every hand expressions of sorrow testify to the regard in which he was held 10 12 02l

Sawston Rat Extermination Association urged the District Council to take measures for the destruction of rats. The Medical Officer said their fleas caused plague and recommended certain poisons should be used. Dead rats should be buried two feet under the ground or, better still, cremated. The council would have to bear expenses if they employed people to exterminate them and they asked farmers and gamekeepers to co-operate in their destruction. 10 12 02l

Through the enterprise of Mr W.J. Ison, the Cambridge public is able to see the latest developments in bicycles as exhibited at the great cycle exhibition at Olympia, London. In the windows of his depots in Chesterton Road and St John's Street are to be seen samples of the all-steel Raleigh cycles which attained such wide fame. Doubtless many local cyclists will take the opportunity of inspecting these latest models of all that is best and most modern in the bicycle – 10 02 09c # c.26.485

Mr S.O. Buckmaster, the defeated candidate, left Cambridge by train for London. In deference to his wishes there was nothing in the nature of a demonstration, but a little band of faithful supporters gathered to see him off. He appeared to be in excellent spirits and laughed gaily as he stood on the platform. Mr Buckmaster was quickly recognised by a number of people who crowded round for a parting handshake. When the whistle sounded he took his seat in a first-class compartment. The last farewell was said by a railwayman who jumped on the footboard and rode for some yards with his head thrust in at the window. 10 12 09 also Almeric Paget # c.33

Two undergraduates were charged with stealing three surveying instruments, the property of Professor McKenny Hughes, curator of the University Geological Museum. A glass case had been broken open and two instruments taken. They had later been found in the students' pockets and their fingerprints were on the glass. The lads said "We had a bet of £5 that some instruments could not be got". The

During the election campaign Mr Newton's meeting at Cottenham was interrupted by people making a tremendous din, hooting, shouting, singing popular songs and blowing mouth organs and tin whistles. Some rowdies resorted to the peculiarly offensive practice of throwing eggs but were unwise in their choice of targets for one egg struck the Deputy Chief Constable in the back of the neck. The disturbances were not confined to one side: during Mr Newton's meeting at Gamlingay a number of sparrows, decorated with the Liberal colours, were liberated and a cracker was thrown upon the platform which jumped about in the usual lively and erratic fashion before it was extinguished. 10 12 09b

All the low-lying land around Swavesey is under water. The roadway is completely submerged at the Swan Pond and foot passengers have to use the raised causeway, the gate openings in which are spanned by temporary bridges. Mr. J. Barnett, dealer of Fenstanton, came to grief when crossing with a horse and cart. One wheel sunk into the recently filled-in trench and became embedded for some time. Previously a cow had sunk in the soft soil near the same place and was with great difficulty dragged out. 10 12 09d The railway line to St Ives has been carefully watched by gangs of men armed with flag.

A chauffeur in charge of a motor car had a very unpleasant experience. He was driving from St Ives to Fenstanton but when he had got to the White Bridge the water in the road was so deep that his engine stopped and he had to remain in the flood all night. PC Beecham saw the car with its powerful light just before two o'clock but did not think anything was amiss as the chauffeur did not sound his horn to attract attention. The car was discovered next morning and a horse had to be obtained to drag it out of the water. 10 12 09g

George Storey was actively engaged in building operations in Romsey Town for many years. Later he conducted an ironmonger, painter and paperhanger's business in Mill Road and then traded as a cycle agent. He had been a member of the Liberal '400' for many years, was the first treasurer of the Cambridge Ratepayers' Association and served on the committee of the Mammoth Show, Wanderers' Cycle Club and National Skating Association. Roller skating racing holds a prominent position in the world of sport. In Cambridge a large crowd were attracted to the University and Town Rink in Magrath Avenue to witness a half-mile amateur championship. It is undoubtedly one of the largest rinks in the Eastern Counties and well suited for racing. The floor was in excellent condition and the times recorded very good indeed. H.P. Pilbeam, a youngster of much promise, was leading up to the last lap but lacked training and could not stay the course. It was won by A. Gray who skated very finely 10 12 16 # c.38 : roller skating

Messrs A.M. Robinson held their Christmas sale as usual at the Cattle Market. Amongst the prize-winners was Mr C. Butler of Swaffham Bulbeck whose five pigs were purchased by J. Prior, butcher of Burleigh Street. There was a fine show of hogs over ten stone which was won by W.A. Payne of Fulbourn with a special prize awarded to E. Gautrey of Cottenham. Mr Backler of Linton won in the sow class while Miss Camps of Chesterton was best in the cottagers' section, her hog being sold to Eastmans 10 12 16a

The crowds outside the Shire Hall assembled early for the results of the poll. They stamped their cold feet on the muddy, puddley ground and scowled at the hopeless sky that spread a light unpleasant drizzle. A little girl, doubtful of her right to stand on so important a site, cuddled up closely to a friendly shop window. An errand boy allowed his political ardour to overcome his sense of what is required of express deliveries. He was joined by a butcher's boy, with a liberal show of Conservative colours, who gave his willing assistance in doing noting to their mutual satisfaction. 10 12 16d # c.33

A gruesome relic has been discovered during renovations at the Hoop Hotel. It is a human skeleton grimly suggestive of a crime committed in days gone bye, a victim's remains ingeniously hidden by a murderer. For hundreds of years generations of people have passed along Bridge Street recking nothing of the horrible trophy which lay some ten feet beneath the pavement. A workman discovered the bones of a woman placed just below the wall and floor of the wine cellar and above the foundations. 10 12 23 # c.27.4 # c.34.6

Two confections in East Road were fined for having penny-in-the-slot machines on their premises. When a penny was placed in the slot three balls came into play. By pulling a small lever the ball was shot around the machine and if it went into a cup the player received a ticket for groceries. There were hundreds of other machines in use in places where players got beer or tobacco. But these were aimed at children. Now the use of all such machines should cease 10 12 23a

The Medical Office said cottages in Graveley were kept in a clean and healthy condition and there was no case of overcrowding. The water supply was from a reservoir well though one or two on the Offord Road got their water from a spring. There was no regular system of drainage and the slop water passed into the dykes on the roadside. But there were some things that required attention such as unsound roofs and the levelling and paving of yards 10 12 23a b

The floods in Huntingdonshire are the worst for thirty years. The main road between Offord and Buckden was impassable and the Great North Road near Alconbury covered with two feet of water, entirely stopping motor car traffic. At St Ives water overflowed into the streets and backed up through the drains. The stabling at the White Horse Hotel yard was submerged and a motor car placed in a lock-up shed was found in a foot of water. The 38 houses on Victoria Terrace and along the London Road were cut off. while the railway at Fen Drayton level crossing was inundated, trains having to proceed at a very cautions pace. 10 12 23c

'Lady Marcia Somerset', alias Bolingbroke of Hemingford Grey was accused of defrauding her creditors by removing certain goods, to wit a grand piano, a quantity of bedroom furniture, brass candlesticks, pair of staghorns, small cupboard with glass doors, two carriage lamps, a pair of horse bits, a couch, two easy chairs, eight small chairs, a piano, three carpets, one hearthrug, four chairs, fender and set of fire-irons, wardrobe, dressing chest, washstand, desk, dinner wagon, six hunting crops, cricket bats and stumps and two baskets containing glass and china. She disposed of them to pawnbrokers leaving practically nothing in the house but a few pots and pans. 10 12 23e

Dr George Cunningham, the dentist of King's Parade, conceived the idea a curling stone that could be used on roller skating rinks. He sought assistance from Henry Birch, a scientific instrument maker. At first the wheels carried the dust into the ball races and clogged them, so he invented a device to prevent the dust from getting in. Then he tried rubber wheels but these were a complete failure. Dr Cunningham never complained of the prices charged but disputed the number of hours it had taken. 10 12 23f # c.38 : skating

At Boxworth the Squire, Mr Arthur Thornhill, with his usual liberality, distributed tickets for Christmas cheer to each householder on his estate. The Christmas charities, coal and money were given out in the schoolroom according to the discretion of the trustees and Mrs A. Hills of Swavesey amused the audience with comic ditties and his banjo. 10 12 23g Two stained glass windows added to church

Whittlesford parish council, after two years of strenuous labour, succeeded in obtaining a suitable burying ground. Having made provision for the dead they now turned attention to the living. The population of the village was falling due to the want of cottages. Every house was occupied and young people must either remain single or leave the village. When there was a death it was not unusual for application to be made for the house before the late tenant had been buried. The last death was that of an aged woman who died during the night and before breakfast there had been two applications for the house on the chance that the widower would give it up. 10 12 23h

At the New Theatre Mr Milton Bode with the assistance of clever scene-painters, musicians with melodies, marvellous modistes and a tip-top cast has made nearly three hours of fun and spectacle out of the history of Cinderella, the prettiest fairy story ever dressed up in pantomime. The catchy music, dainty dresses and refreshing humour provide an evening of unflagging enjoyment. Never was there a Baronial hall so well stocked with entertaining people without the usual troublesome outsiders who stop the story because they want to ring bells or spin plates 11 01 06

Mr F.O. Chapman, commissioned by the Canadian Government is making a short tour of local villages calling attention to the enormous and almost limitless field which the Dominion holds out to British labour. He opened his campaign at Harston where he told hearers that if they were doing well over here they would be foolish to go to Canada. But if there were any who were not receiving sufficient return for their energies they would do well to try their fortunes in the colonies. His lecture was illustrated by a very fine series of photographic views shown by means of the oxy-hydrogen limelight lantern apparatus 11 01 06 # EMIGRATION

The tower of Bourn church is in great danger and the work of making it safe must be done at once. The vicar and churchwardens are doing their best to raise funds in the parish but feel it impossible, owing to the magnitude of the work, to raise the whole sum of £850 without help. They appeal to all who admire the ancient architecture of England to help them preserve this magnificent specimen of 13th-century work to future generations. A parish tea and social was attended with great success. After tea the floor was cleared for dancing and the proceeds were devoted to the appeal 11 01 06c

During 1910 there were only ten bankruptcies in the Cambridge district. Evidently trade is not so bad after all in this part of the country. Probably this is due to a little more wisdom on the part of tradesmen in the matter of giving credit. Previously they have allowed labourers, earning only a small weekly wage, to get into debt to an extent which renders it quite impossible for tradesmen to get their money back. Two of the failures have been builders, the others have included a hay merchant, baker, farmer, cabman, draper, bicycle dealer and a racing tout 11 01 06d

Legislative changes have removed the pauper disqualification in connection with the Old Age Pensions Act. At Cambridge workhouse 22 men and 16 women were eligible for the pension but only three have declared their intention of leaving the House. All three are men between 70 and 75 years of age who are going to live with relatives. At Chesterton Workhouse 48 inmates are entitled to the pension but again only three are leaving, one being over 80. Another old man has not yet made up his mind. Perhaps the coming of more genial weather will bring him to a decision to accept his pension and forsake the shelter of the House. 11 01 06f # c.32.9

In their report on the state of the property market in Cambridgeshire Messrs Rutter and Company say business has been disappointing during 1910. Only a small amount of property has changed hands in Cambridge for investment but with properties for occupation there had been a very fair demand at satisfactory prices. This has been caused by the scarcity of medium-sized available houses to rent. They have had a number of letters from buyers intimating that they intend to wait until the question of taxation has been straightened out. Prices for farms have been well maintained but the present harvest has been a poor one and the market must feel the effect 11 01 13e # c.06

P.C. Parker told the court that he was on duty at the Police Station when the door-bell rang. He saw the prisoner who said he wished to be locked up as he had nowhere to go. He was drunk, was staggering and would have fallen if not prevented. The man, a labourer from Manchester, said "It was all along of this Plough Monday do". Some men got him into a public house and a little beer got hold of him. They set his coat on trousers on fire and he went to the Police station as he was ashamed to walk about. The prisoner, whose clothes were hanging in tatters, was discharged. 11 01 13g

In his will Thomas Payne, a Swavesey boot dealer has decreed that every 29th January, on his birthday, his trustees should give half a pound of tea and one pound of sugar to each of the poor widows of the village. A brass tablet is to be placed on the wall of the church near to the seats he used to occupy in memory of his wife and himself. 11 01 13h

Stall holders on Cambridge Market have been troubled by repeated small thefts. The elusive genius of the pilfering urchin is well known but Cambridge boys have resorted to other devices. One favourite plan is for two boys to walk past and for one to throw the other's cap on the stall. In recovering the cap the boy generally manages to get an orange or two underneath it. Another is for a boy to have a piece of wood with a nail on the end and to spike an apple or other fruit with it. The police have been keeping a sharp look-out with the result that a lad of 14 was arrested for staling nougat from Mr Careless's sweet stall. 11 01 13g # c.27.3

The strike of Norfolk farm labourers, which has been waged since May last, has now ended. Thirty-three men returned to work on the same terms as they had come out, leaving 42 to be dealt with. It is feared the farmers will not take some of them back. The men's union had recommended acceptance of the farmers' terms and decided to withhold further strike pay. They had received thirteen shillings for working six days a week from 6am to 6pm with half an hour for breakfast and two hours rest in the middle of the day. Strike-breakers had been secured from Norwich and Cambridge, hence the protracted nature of the struggle. 11 01 13i # c.22

The observance of Plough Monday in Willingham has degenerated into parties of boys calling at houses and asking for coppers. This year an old custom has been revived. A party of young men, wearing top hats decorated with ribbons and carrying whips dragged a plough round the village. On their way they met an old ploughman and on his declining to assist them financially, they harnessed him to the plough and he drew it for some distance. He was soon released but not before he had afforded much amusement to the onlookers and the young men - 11 01 13j # c.39

Sir - At the recent fire on the premises of the chairman of Swavesey parish council, one of the men working on the engine had the misfortune to have a finger crushed. He had to call in a doctor and stay away from work for a fortnight. As compensation he has received fifteen shillings, the amount of the doctor's bill, but nothing whatever for loss of pay during incapacity. Will such treatment encourage others to help out at fires in the village? Are the parish councillors who have charge of the engine prepared to work it themselves at future fires? If not would it not be wise if they took steps to have the young man adequately compensated? – ' Poor Old Joe' – 11 01 13j

On 'The Squire's annual tea party' the children of the Sawston Girls' Boy' and Infants' schools, numbering about 270, were given an half-day's holiday. This enabled the caterers to have one of the large schools cleared of its desks and replaced by three long rows of tables. At the Infant's School the little tots sat at their dual desks, their eyes sparkling as they beheld a huge Christmas tree laden will dolls, picture books and a variety of toys. Then they were entertained to a sumptuous tea, followed by an evening's entertainment. Afterward three cheers were given to Mr & Mrs Huddleston for their kindness. 11 01 13ggg

The famous old bells in the chapel tower of Trinity College have been re-cast and lowered in tone by Messrs Taylor of Loughborough. They had not previously been taken down since their erection. The largest one bears the date 1610 and was made by Richard Holdeld, another is the work of Thomas Osborn of Downham and was put in the tower in 1795 while the third dates back to 1726. An NSPPC Inspector visited a cottage in Rectory Lane, Somersham. The bedrooms were in a filthy condition and the bed clothing very black. Four children were in the outhouse which was very cold and damp, only two yards square and had no window. Their clothing was all in rags and their flesh visible in several cases. The mother said she'd put them in the outhouse while she cleaned out the living room and they were playing in their old clothes as she kept the others to go to school in. She was sent to gaol for three week's hard labour. A woman in court offered to take charge of the eldest boy and the Inspector was asked to place the others. 11 01 27c

There are few better known figures in the Cambridge police force than Sergeant Merry who is retiring to take up farming in Brisbane, Australia. Interesting developments have taken place in connection with the mysterious foreigner at St Ives Workhouse. St John's was obviously an outgrowth of the town while the old village was in St Andrew's ward. Sir Robert Baden-Powell is to inspect Cambridge boy scouts in May when troops will give demonstrations of their work. Cambridgeshire is a county in which the movement has made little progress and it is hoped his visit will arouse greater enthusiasm. A prize of a regulation B flat bugle will be awarded to the best patrol raised in a new centre. There are already twelve troops in Cambridge, which is now one of the best organised scout centres in the kingdom but more men are needed to volunteer as scoutmasters 11 02 17a # c.37.9

The death of Thomas Reynolds, cattle dealer, took place at his residence, Oak House, Hinxton. He was a member of an old Puritan family and the rows of gravestones placed in memories of his ancestors in Hinxton churchyard can still be seen. During the Civil War a John Reynolds was one of the best offices in Cromwell's regiment of Ironsides and a James Reynolds was Baron of the Exchequer to George II. 11 02 17e

The great scientist Alfred Russell Watson once accepted a challenge to prove that the earth was round and, after consultation with Prof Newton, selected six miles of the Old Bedford Canal as the scene of his experiment. But he did not satisfy all the parties concerned in the challenge. So H. Yule Oldham carried out a similar experiment by placing a mark 15 foot above the water between two bridges between Denver and Welney. A long-distance photograph showed it to be considerably above the line of sight. But an elderly lock-keeper who appeared in the photograph shown at New Chesterton Institute was still firmly convinced that the earth was flat 11 02 17c

There were 31 cowsheds in Cambridge and of these six should be pulled down at once. Some were ramshackle wooden buildings, badly lighted and ill-ventilated. They should have concrete floors, a supply of pure water for flushing and the manure should be a proper distance away. Each milkman should have fresh clothing each day and wash his hands before he went to milk. The milk should be immediately strained and cooled then placed in sterilised cans hermetically sealed to be sent to its destination, the medical offer reported 11 02 17d

The demand for tickets to hear Melba sing is very naturally heavy. At Millers seats are being continually booked by telephone and every post brings letters. Although Mr Miller only engages the very best talent for his concerts he always tries to accommodate as many people as may be in the cheaper parts of the hall so the general public shall not be deprived of the pleasure of hearing famous singers. Some of these lower-priced seats will be sold at the door. 11 02 17 # c.69

A taxi driver was summoned for dangerous driving. Richard Glasscock, cabdriver was driving a horse attached to a brougham on King's Parade with three passengers when a taxi came out of Bene't Street on the wrong side of the road at about 12 mph. He had to pull the horse on to the middle of the road and hit it with the whip to get away. The taxi caught the hub of the hind wheel and smashed the springs. Its driver had said his steering gear had been locked for two days. The Mayor said taxi-cabs were driven too fast and fined the driver five shillings 11 02 17

When an eleven-year-old schoolboy appeared in court the vicar of Harston testified that his daughter had been standing in front of the porch at the vicarage with his grandson in her arms. A heavy hoop came bounding against them with great force, bounced over a rockery and struck the lad in the back. There was a funeral going on at the time and he saw boys outside the gate. This sort of thing had been going on for two years. One lad had taken hold of the perambulator and tried to throw it over. This child should be removed for the benefit of the community at large. Magistrates were reluctant to convict but told the parents to ensure their son behaved properly 11 02 24b

The Cambridgeshire Public House Trust Association says that inns that are well conducted have to bear a much heavier burden of taxation than pubs which merely serve alcoholic liquors. To add refreshment rooms or bedrooms to existing houses is now impossible but improvements have been made to the Hardwicke Arms at Arrington and the Bell Inn, Kennett. Others including the Tharp Arms, Chippenham, George and Dragon Snailwell and the Spread Eagle at Croxton have been maintained in good condition though profits are down again 11 02 24

The ideas governing military manoeuvres are generally very practical and prosaic, if a trifle far-fetched. But those of the University Officers Training Corps are often diverting. General Stummakoffski had received a wound from the lance of one of his troops which prevented him sitting in the saddle and was forced to continue his flight in a litter, trying to reach Comberton. Firing was carried out at murderously short range and had ball cartridges been used they would have put enough bullets into the litter to have considerably alarmed 'The General' to say the least! 11 02 24c

A nasty accident took place in Histon High Street on Sunday evening. After church two elderly ladies walking in opposite directions collided in the darkness. The elder, who is over 80, was knocked down and broke a bone in her thigh. To an old lady such an accident is a serious matter. In a properly lighted streets such things would never occur and the moral that it points out to the ratepayers is obvious 11 02 24f

Swaffham Bulbeck parish council applied to borrow £800 to purchase 'Denny Close' for use as a recreation ground. An Inspector examined the proposals and was told that children were a nuisance in

The County Education Committee recommended that an architect arrange for digging the garden and trimming the hedge in front of the site of the new school at Odsey. Major Stanley thought if the council dug this garden they would have to dig them in all the schools, such things mounted up and they should safeguard the need of the ratepayers. But the Chairman said that if he erected cottages in the fields he would certainly have the gardens dug before the tenants went in. Such work was usually done in the case of a new school. 11 03 03

A dental institute in connection with Stapleford Council School would cost £100 for the initial equipment and the dentist's fee. A similar scheme in Cambridge had been one of the best pieces of work done for the sake of children. It was a good thing to see to children's' teeth but if they did it for one school it must be done all round, which would mean a great expense. Councillors agreed to pay £25 for equipment provided children attending Shelford School were included in the scheme 11 03 03a

Hauxton Council School had 59 children on the books, which was too many for the space in which they were able to do their lessons. But six came from Shelford parish and there were seven under the age of five. If the managers excluded these, there would be sufficient room. The problem was due to the bad arrangement of the large room and Councillor Hurrell did not see why the parish should be asked to build a new school. Nor had the owner of the school, the Vicar, been approached with a view to enlarging it. The county should consider purchasing it from him. 11 03 03b

The Black Bear Press was started by Mr Dixon, a printer and stationer, with premises in Hills Road and machinery had been bought. It had been placed on the Paris Bourse stock exchange but this had proved unsuccessful and had accepted contracts at unremunerative prices. They had now sold the printing plant and machinery as well as "The Gownsman" but not "The Hairdresser" or "The Cambridge Directory" and there were shares in the Maxwell Publishing Company, for whom they did printing, creditors were told. 11 03 03b # c.25

A fire at Sutton destroyed three thatched cottages on the Green. The village brigade did what they could with their out-of-date fire apparatus and water was obtained from a nearby pond but the fire spread to two other cottages. Many villagers, including women, worked like Trojans to remove furniture and effects and a scene of indescribable confusion prevailed. The bedding and all sorts of oddments were thrown in a heap, some of the good being accidentally broken. When the occupants finally proceeded to take possession of their belongings they found everything so mixed up that difficulties were experienced in deciding the rightful owners. It was quite a case of topsy-turvydom. 11 03 03g

An undergraduate motor cyclist going down Fore Hill Ely at a terrific rate, with a college friend on the carrier, rode straight ahead in the direction of the river and did not realise the danger till it was too late. Within a few yards of the Quay the friend threw himself off the carrier, escaping with a few bruises, but the rider was unable to save himself. The weighty cycle fell over the Quay wall and sank immediately and the motorist, turning a somersault, struck the water about mid stream. Mr Merry's boat was moored at the spot and the machine was hauled up thanks to workers from the nearby brewery. Mr Philip Cutlack kindly supplied the dripping driver with a dry suit of clothes and he proceeded to Cambridge by train. 11 03 03h

Tom Wilson, a London bookmaker, told the court that he attended Cottenham Steeplechases and took a pitch near the course. He erected large boards with his name and picture on them, then stood on a stool and took bets despite being warned by police. There were 34 other bookmakers doing the same thing and none of them had been summoned: he had only been prosecuted because his banner was bigger than the rest. But a policeman said he'd approached each of the others and they'd all said they would not stop unless Wilson did. He was fined £20 – 11 03 03i & j

A Bassingbourn grocer's assistant told the court he'd left the premise with the horse and van containing groceries. The horse was in very good condition, although a bit stiff when it started. The van was an ordinary grocer's van and he had been driving horses 13 years. He denied any cruelty to the animal. But P.C. Frost noticed the horse was lame on the off-side leg and an RSPCA Inspector said it was unfit for work. The grocer said the animal had since been disposed of and he'd gone to London to buy a replacement. The charge of cruel ill-treatment was dismissed. 11 03 03j

The Cross Keys beer house stood on the main street at Sawston opposite the Morning Star and the Woolpack, both of which had more accommodation and did better trade. It consisted of a tap-room, small bar, sitting room, five bedrooms, a little back yard and stabling. Its trade was just over a barrel a week. There were 13 licensed houses in the village of 1,699 people and this one was not required. But others were worse: the Chequers was a little tumbled-down cottage. The magistrates renewed the license. 11 03 03k

Measles is very widely prevalent in Cambridge just now, largely due to the fact that it is nearly three years since there was an epidemic and a large population of susceptible children has grown up. Parents should be familiar with the symptoms which are similar to those of a common cold and should keep the children at home until quite certain measles will not develop. This is not a trifling complaint: the average deaths from measles is five to six times higher than from scarlet fever and a doctor should be called in immediately it is suspected 11 03 10 # c.21.1

Joel Stubbings, landlord of the Spade and Beckett, Littleport told an inquest that after the usual customers had gone away the deceased had said he felt weak and low and had asked permission to lie down in the chaff house. Joel said to get some chaff bags and wrap himself in them and pull some of the rough hay over him, adding that next day he should go back to the Workhouse. By morning the man was dead. Police-Sergt Wright said he found an old pocket handkerchief with a shilling tied up in one corner, an old clay pipe, some cough lozenges and a small tooth comb in his pocket. The jury decided he'd died from heart failure 11 03 10a

At the head of the funeral procession was a hansom. Seats on the top with legs dangling over the side, was the undertaker. His mournful calling seemed to have cast a settled gloom over his countenance. His eyes were mournful and sad, and his clothing was of the deepest black, save for his socks (he wore no shoes), which were of the brightest scarlet. In his hand he waved a long whip (an emblem of his mournful trade), with a bright handkerchief to match his wonderful socks tied to it. Behind the hearse were nine carriages filled with loudly lamenting mourners – extract from a report of a 'Mock Funeral' for an undergraduate sent down from university 11 03 10b # c.36.9 # c.39

A collision occurred between a motor van belonging to Messrs Lever of the Port Sunlight Soap Company and a motor car (CE 1037), at the junction of East Road and Newmarket Road. The back wheel of the motor car struck the back part of the van with the result that the front axle and steering gear were bent and the speedometer damaged. A spoke was broken from the nearside back wheel and a bolt smashed out of the hub of the wheel of the motor car. Fortunately the damage done was not very serious and no personal injuries were sustained. 11 03 10c

Fire broke out at Thorne Hall, Wicken, a farm residence formerly known as Rat Hall about a mile outside the village. Mrs Layton went to the stairs door and could see the bedrooms full of smoke, she sent for help and her husband and other men put out the fire with difficulty. It is an old-fashioned house and the chimneys have much wood in them. The damage is confined to the chimney beams, the floor and to the family washing which was being hung up to dry in front of the fire. 11 03 10d

There are still a number of houses at St Ives supplied by surface wells and after the late floods there were many cases of diarrhoea. In every case the water supply came from these surface wells. There is no doubt that the sewage is driven back by the rising water in the subsoil and contaminates the wells. It is fortunate that the drains were not infected with such a disease as typhoid or there would have been a bad epidemic. The wells should be inspected and if infected they should be closed, the Medical Officer reported. 11 03 10e

Rev S. Trerice Adams, the rector of Coton, has returned from New Zealand where he has been acting as vicar of St Mary's church in Timaru for 18 months. On his departure he was given a handsome album containing beautiful views of Canterbury and a purse of sovereigns. He arrived in Coton having travelled overland from Marseilles where he left the Orient line Ophir and was received most enthusiastically by parishioners. He is in excellent health and takes up his work at once, preaching morning and evening Sunday next in the village church 11 03 17

Several young Whittlesford people who are desirous of marrying have thought it wiser not to do so as there were no houses for them. The Parish Council possesses two cottages standing on the Town Lands and wished to pull these down and erect four new houses in their place. They applied to the Local Government Board for a loan to cover the building cost. The income would prevent any charge on to the rates and in time the new houses would become a valuable asset to the village, an Inspector was told. 11 03 17a & b

Over Mutual Insurance Society had been in existence since 1845. Members who paid two shillings a week were entitled to sick pay at the rate of twelve shillings a week for one year, six shillings for another year and three shillings a week for life if illness continued. Five people were now claiming this amount and the Trustees wanted to alter the rules. One read: "No member shall be allowed to work" and another that a member was entitled to three shillings a week for life, whether he was ill or well. The judge said he would like to belong to such a club (Laughter). But there was no provision to alter them 11 03 17c

A Leicester jewellery firm sued a number of farm labourers over payment for watches. Their representative touted cheap watches thinly covered with silver and encouraged the men to buy them on instalments. Once the contract is signed the customer became liable, even if they stop working, and the judge had no option but to impose payment even though an expert had told him the watches were only worth 7/6. Excellent watches can be bought for a few shillings from any reputable local jeweller and it would be against their interests to supply shoddy goods at high prices as they had a reputation to maintain 11 03 17c & h & e

Histon Troop of Peace Scouts was inspected by Sir Francis Vane, President of the British Boy Scouts who said the Histon Troop was not only the First of All in England, but the First of All in the world (great applause). War is an awful thing and the Peace Scouts were an order whose role was to rescue and save, not destroy. Their ambulance work was performed with enthusiasm, the Morse signalling was good and the Swedish drill excellent. But they should be given training in Fire Brigade work so they could assist in passing buckets of water in an emergency. 11 03 24e # c.37.9

A lantern lecture organised by the Tariff Reform League at Castle Camps schoolroom was brought to a standstill by children who formed three-parts of the audience. When the speeches began they burst into the singing of the 'Land song'. They were eventually persuaded to be quiet but found something to knock about at the end of the room. Then one started coughing and the rest followed suit. Stamping was the next form of amusement and a number of adults joined in. At last the lecturer refused to go on. 11 03 31 & a

A crowd of about 500 people collected outside the residence of Mr J.A. Sturton, Gonville House at Hyde Park Corner. Nobody seemed to know quite what was going on, or why they were standing about watching the house. All sorts of theories were afloat, ranging from a ghastly murder to an escaped parrot. As a matter of fact it was a suspected housebreaker, not a parrot, that had escaped. The suspect had run down the drive and stumbled over the kennel where a large collie dog was calmly sleeping. It sprang up and seized in his teeth the first thing he happened to meet. Unfortunately it was the back of the police constable's coat who was pulled to the ground just as he was about to grab his man. 11 03 31b.

Fire broke out at the Hills Road branch of Mr B.T. Waits, the well-known tailor and outfitter. It appears that four of his workpeople left the workroom at the back of the shop for a few minutes and on returning found a wooden case standing by the fireplace had caught fire and a number of garments were burning. A dozen overcoats were completely destroyed before the flames were extinguished 11 03 31d

Two nursemaids appeared in court for walking side by side with perambulators. Several people had to get off the pavement or stand up against the wall on account of the obstruction caused. But one said "My Mistress, Lady Donaldson of Magdalene Lodge, told me to take no notice of the police as they could do nothing in the matter, and I shan't either. It's a pity you haven't got something better to do". Where were they to be wheeled: children must go somewhere and the path was the only safe place. They had not stopped to look in shop windows and nobody had complained. They were found guilty but no penalty was inflicted 11 03 31c # WOMEN

The new Labour Exchange in Guildhall Street was visited by large numbers of people, most of whom contented themselves with scanning the red-boarded notices of situations vacant posted up in the windows. But about 40 applicants for work gave their names and some were at once notified of vacancies. Exchanges all over the country are linked up and the Cambridge office communicated by telephone with the Aberdeen Exchange to help a Scottish man find work. There are vacancies for motor repairers, electrical fitters and shorthand typists and a good demand for healthy men expert in pick and shovel work who are willing to go to Australia as railway labourers. 11 03 31e # c.32.1

Works have already been taken for the construction of aeroplanes and numerous sheds are expected to be erected shortly. Most aviators consider Port Holme

Lt Abington annual parish meeting was distinctly breezy. Last year the meeting was held in the school when the lighting arrangements were inadequate: there were no lamps and the parishioners had to see as best they could with the aid of two or three diminutive candles. This year it was the Mission Hall but the Vicar objected and the chairman threatened to call in the policeman to eject him. Reference was made to the excessive speed of motor cars through the village. The disused railway line from Gt Chesterford to Six Mile Bottom should be made into a motor track. 11 03 31g

They were each sentenced to seven days imprisonment and in addition two were fined for using obscene language and one sent to prison for a month for assaulting a policeman. The Mayor said one of them was a perfect pest to Castle End and it was beyond the comprehension of the magistrates to know what to do with him. It was a pity he could not get abroad. It was a thousand pities that a good-looking smart young man like him could not live a better life. 11 04 21b

Richard Borley was a fruiterer at Rattlesden who visited Stowmarket and surrounding villages on certain days each week to dispose of his produce. He also assisted his son in the conveyance of parcels to and from Stowmarket. Last Saturday he was returning home with several parcels when his donkey cart caught fire. It is thought a lighted pipe may have been put into one of the boxes containing lengths of flannelette and this caused them to ignite. It must have broken out some time before it was discovered as the back of the vehicle was nearly burnt through and the seat upon which Mr Borley was sitting had a hole burnt in it. 11 04 21c # carrier

It is nearly 50 years since the Wesleyan Church at Cottenham was built and the only Sunday School accommodation has been a tiny building at the back, holding just 30 children. Numbers have increased until there are nearly 100 scholars on the books and for a long time past the church has had to be utilised. Now the foundation stone of a new Sunday School has been laid by Mrs John Chivers. Even at Cottenham, a centre for nonconformity, the response to the appeal for funds has been remarkable 11 04 21d

Francis Nixon of Rectory Farm, Great Eversden had purchased the old British School with the intention of opening it as an institute and reading room for the parishes. After his death his widow completed the work and the Nixon Hall was now opened. It will be used for the social and intellectual wellbeing of the inhabitants. Afterwards 100 people sat down to a tea and a concert given by local friends, when the hall was packed. 11 04 21f

Chatteris brigade were on their way to deal with a farm fire when they received a call to another at the premises of Messrs Price and Company in Railway Lane. It originated in store rooms where there was a large stock of matting, mats and materials used in the company's manufactures. In a very few minutes the whole premises were ablaze and the adjoining Cricketers public house surrounded by flames. There was danger of the range of dilapidated buildings in King Edward's Lane and the new schools becoming involved but with a good supply of water these were saved. 11 04 21g

Croxton School is carefully conducted and the good effects of the gardening, cookery, woodwork and Morris dancing extend to other subjects, an Inspector reported. On Wednesday afternoons boys can be seen sowing seeds and planting potatoes, pruning trees, applying manures or experimenting in growing grasses. The girls also do gardening during the summer months. In woodworking class the boys have just completed a substantial wheelbarrow and cooking is proving of great value to the girls. There is no difficulty in disposing of the cooked food at cost price and sometimes the children bring food from their homes to be cooked. One mother trusts her 13-year-old with the cooking of the whole dinner whilst she goes out for the day. The Morris dancing is an interest and delight to both children and teachers 11 04 28c

An Inspector's report on Cambridge Workhouse criticised arrangements in the sick ward, the dietary, bathing arrangements and care of children. The sick ward contained 25 male and 28 females with only one partially trained nurse and a woman who came in to sit up at night. The majority of the bed-ridden cases were helpless and a great deal of the actual nursing was done by paupers. There were no modern conveniences and the female side top floor had only a drinking water tap fixed over a basin. A new midwifery ward had been erected with no sink or hot and cold water 11 04 28e # c.32.9

The landlady of the Rose public house, Rose Crescent was fined for allowing gambling. Detective Marsh said he went into a room at the back of the bar and saw a young man put money in a penny-in-the-slot machine. He pulled a lever and a ball was forced round. If it had got into a red compartment it paid out two pence but it fell into a white compartment and the money was lost. There was another machine of a different make in the bar. Police had received definite instructions to prosecute in all cases where the machines were found. But there was a similar machine at the Mitre, where it was allowed 11 05 05

The lad said there was no notice and he had seen people playing there for the last two years. There could be a danger if anyone had been on the Green, but there was nobody there when he was playing. The constable had seen him with his club and could have stopped him but allowed him to play before asking for his name, college and year saying third year men generally got more heavily fined than Freshmen. Together with a farm of 260 acres with numerous buildings and shooting rights it failed to sell at auction, being withdrawn at £9,000. When Carter told him to go away the prisoner struck him, knocked his hat off, pulled his whiskers and used bad language. The man later called at the lodgings of P.C. Smith and again asked for dripping. On arrest he had a pound of bread in his possession that he'd got from the Workhouse. The tramp was sentenced to one month's imprisonment 11 05 12a

There are a number of patients from Cambridgeshire in the Royal Eastern Counties' Institution for Idiots, Imbeciles and the Feeble-Minded at Colchester which started in 1859. Many patients were so crippled and helpless that they needed individual attention. The youngest was only four, the oldest 65 and they were of every grade. They reserved a number of beds for life cases who remained on payment of £10 per annum. It was not merely a home but a training school were every ray of intelligence was welcomed. Older girls worked in the kitchen or laundry in the morning and then at basket work, rug making, cane-seating or on the knitting machine. Cambridgeshire used to be notorious for the patches which were put on the road and left for the traffic to roll down. Now they are left above the height of the road with sharp edges all round so that anyone going over in a trap, motor car or bicycle bumped up and then bumped down. The surveyor had told roadmen to ease off the patches with small material but it had not a lasting effect. The roadmen had a beautiful little book with instructions printed to small they wanted glasses to read them, councillor Orlebar reported 11 05 19

During church time on Sunday evening Mr Arthur Lilley, whose farm is opposite Conington School, noticed a man hanging about the premises in a suspicious manner. He later saw him drawing down the blinds of the sitting room of the school mistress's house and, knowing Mrs Allen was at church, sent his daughter to call her. It was found that every room had been ransacked, drawers had been pulled open and their contents scattered. 11 05 19a

The Storey's Charity Estate occupies one of the most elevated and healthy positions in Cambridge. The greater portion of the sites front the new road known as Storey's Way which is likely to become a major thoroughfare between Huntingdon & Madingley roads. Gas, water and electric light mains are laid on. Given its proximity to the Backs of the Colleges it should become one of the most popular residential estates in the neighbourhood. Judging from the interest the plots should be readily disposed of. 11 06 02c # c.23

George Neal is regarded by Ely people as an interesting character. From the time of the siege of Mafeking 'George' has been a most ardent admirer of Sir R.S. Baden-Powell, and not long ago he received an autographed portrait of that well-known soldier in return for one of himself attired as a Scout. Notwithstanding his infirmities – he is deformed and paralysed – he preserves a cheerful disposition. The Scout Rally at Cambridge proved a great temptation, which he could not resist. Attired as a Scout, having purchased a khaki suit for the purpose, 'George' went to Cambridge hoping to see 'B.P.' It appears he found the exertion of marching too much for him and he returned to Ely somewhat disappointed. Now he has disappeared 11 06 02e

Swavesey feast cannot be recorded as having been a success. The attendance of visitors from neighbouring villages was unusually small and there was an absence of incidents of interest. One gentleman in his shirt sleeves drove a family round the feast in a small donkey cart and caused a little

The Cambridge Horse Parade Society show on Midsummer Common attracted over 100 entries. Seldom were such glossy coats, spotless harness and glittering brasses seen in the streets of Cambridge on ordinary working days. The huge Shire horse attached to the brewers' drays, coal wagons and farm carts were in striking contrast to the high-stepping, spirited carriage and cab horses and dainty ponies drawing the smaller tradesmen's' carts. Donkeys had a class to themselves; one looked very plump and contented which made him incline towards sluggishness. 11 06 09 # c.18

The bursting of a motor tyre caused considerable consternation in Trumpington Street on Sunday morning. The car's tyres were filled with a kind of solution used to fill the tube instead of air which is supposed to increase the resiliency. Through being too tightly filled, or having expanded with the great heat of the sun, one burst and the solution was scattered far and wide with great force. The pavement was covered along the whole frontage of Peterhouse but most heart-breaking damage was the adhesion of the sticky reddish solution to ladies' dresses; ten were spoiled 11 06 09 # c.26.48

What were believed to be five aeroplanes passed over Cambridge for a few minutes on Thursday afternoon. They were at a great height and travelling at a rapid rate and were out of sight in about a minute and a half. When observed, two were first noticed. These were followed at some considerable interval by three others. One of the spectators suggested they were pieces of paper, and another that they were birds. But their colour – they looked perfectly white –the absence of lateral movement and their peculiar oscillating flight with occasional glides, seemed to contradict this idea. They crossed the town in a north-westerly direction, evidently moving at a great speed 11 06 09b # c.26.1

A furniture pantechnicon belonging to Mr Winter was involved in a collision with a motor car near Bottisham. It was overturned and practically smashed up. The three horses drawing it were freed from the shafts, took fright and bolted while the driver and two other men, all of whom were seated on the top, were thrown off. The motor car, a valuable high-powered touring vehicle, was badly damaged and the passenger sent hurtling through the glass screen. Mr H.P. Storey, cycle and motor engineer of Bridge Street sent out his tackle and staff who brought the damaged car back to his garage for repairs estimated at £100. It was not insured. 11 06 16

An inquest into the death of a 17-year old labourer working in Mr Frost's clunch pits at Isleham were told it had been his job to fill the carts with top soil and drive them away. Three older men then felled the clunch with crowbars. The lad had gone under the 'lynch' (the wall of clunch) and started to undercut it with a pick. He'd only picked about half a barrow full before it fell, due to a sand vein in the clunch. He had no business to use a pick at all, but young fellows liked to bring down a lot of clunch with a few blows. Every precaution was taken at the pit, this was an accident. 11 06 16a

A disastrous fire at Ramsey destroyed half-a-dozen houses in the main street. It started in the chimney of a thatched house and the interior walls being of old-fashioned reed and plaster, the property was almost instantly ablaze. A lodger got out safely, though singed, as did the owner of the house, a small farmer. But his wife hurried upstairs to recover some trinkets and was not seen again. Her charred body was found at the foot of the stairs. By her side was a box containing a watch, rings and money. The town of Ramsey is largely composed of thatched cottages. 11 06 16b

Another serious fire broke out in Ashwell, the second within a fortnight and the cause remains a mystery. The labouring classes were returning from work and plenty of willing hands dealt with the blaze passing buckets of water. The well-organised Baldock Brigade arrived in quick time considering they had four miles of nearly all up hill country to cover. The parish pays five shillings to the man who gets to church and rings no.5 bell, which is the recognised fire bell. But people complain that one man keeps the keys and so always gets there first. The key should be hung in some conspicuous place and full encouragement given to all 11 06 16b

Motorists are notoriously selfish. They practically monopolise the highways, making walking or cycling on main roads both unpleasant and dangerous. And they have sent up the cost of road upkeep to a figure undreamt of a few years ago. But the motor has come to stay and local authorities must face the situation. Motorists are usually large ratepayers and are heavily taxed. Tyres are expensive articles and a car owner who is compelled to drive over a patch of unrolled and sharp stones is entitled to protest. 11 06 16d

Every house should be furnished with a proper metal refuse container. At present all sorts of receptacles – pails, wooden boxes, tin pans etc – were stuck on the edge of pavements, without covers, so that the wind and dogs scattered their contents about the streets and children picked over the rubbish. In hot weather the refuse lay exposed to sun, fermenting, decaying and attracting swarms of flies. But who would provide for the damage done to receptacles: the dust carts were so high that dustmen had to throw them up to a man on top to catch as best he could. Fen Drayton has been in a mild state of ferment over who was to be asked in church on Sunday. From the gooseberry garden to every house the matter was eagerly talked over. Various couples were fixed upon but nothing could be discovered. At the parsonage the clergyman waited in patience for the bridegroom-elect to make a formal request for banns. But he waited in vain. The parish constable was disturbed three times whilst arraying himself in Sabbath raiment by knocks at his door enquiring as to the identity of the happy couple. A larger congregation than usual attended. But no banns were put up. It had just been a ploy to give the village a fresh subject to talk about. 11 06 23d

The Red White and Blue Helping Hand Slade Club at Lt Downham raised funds by weekly subscriptions to render assistance to members unable to follow their employment. A man injured when working for the Littleport Drainage Commissioners said he had been incapacitated for seven weeks. After a fortnight the club refused him more sick pay and then threw him out for dinking. But the rules said the first time a claimant was intoxicated he should be fined sixpence so he took the case to court and was awarded judgement against them. 11 06 30b

Several skulls and other human bones were dug up when excavating for a new water supply at Swavesey and were re-buried in the churchyard. Mr J. Jillings, a hale and hearty veteran of 90, remembers that prior to the making of the present road 70 years ago the churchyard extended to

Chesterton Horticultural and Sports Society held their first annual show in the pretty grounds of Meadow Croft. The extreme dryness of the weather accounted for the emptiness of some of the classes but still 500 entries were received. William Hepher, when engaged in stacking hay in a farm yard at Swavesey, hung up his coat and waistcoat on a wurtzel cutter. When he went to put them on, the waistcoat was missing: two half-grown pigs had dragged it down and torn it to pieces. Young Hepher missed his watch and chain which he had left in a pocket and a search was made. At length a piece of chain was seen hanging from the mouth of one of the pigs and the watch was found inside. The case was marked with impressions of the animal's teeth but it was still going 11 06 30g

The present opening hours of the Central Library Reading Room do not meet the needs of people who commence business at 9am or earlier and must wait until 10 before they can consult directories or other reference books. The Crystal Palace pub in Mill Road Cambridge was difficult to supervise, police reported. The only way to get to the back was down a narrow passage at the side, the door of which was always locked. The Bell in Northampton Street was in bad repair with terrible accommodation, the house was damp and the only cooking facilities were in an underground kitchen. The landlady of the Chequers Impington said it was the only place to get a good glass of beer and if it closed many a man would become a teetotaller. George Race, the oldest Master of Hounds in the Kingdom, died at his residence in Biggleswade aged 92. He was the son of John Race, better known as 'Thistle Whipper' of the old 'Sporting Magazine', who handed over his horn to this promising youngster in 1840. From that day he hunted hare, fox or deer as the chance presented. Undergraduates were wont to go and have a day with the Biggleswade Harriers for the best gallop to be found anywhere. The Little Rose in Trumpington Street was close to Addenbrooke's Hospital and the landlord believed that no matter what time of the day it was on a Sunday, if anybody came and said they had been to the Hospital he was perfectly justified in serving them liquor. If they had come from a longer distance than that required by law this was quite right. But a policeman said he had watched two men who neither came from or went to the Hospital and had been served with a drink. Next time anybody was brought to court they would be severely dealt with. 11 07 21 # c.27.4

Everyone concerned is to be congratulated on the construction of a light railway to link up the old-world Essex town of Thaxted with the Great Eastern system at Elsenham. It is 15 years since the project was mooted and now the first sod has been cut. The difficulties have been great: land was difficult to obtain and it was not easy to raise the money for a scheme which does not present the likelihood of profit. But the Treasury considered it would tend to the development of agriculture and made a substantial grant. Now the long-cherished dream is almost an accomplished fact 11 07 21b 11 07 28g & h # c.26.2

Littleport Show held in the grounds of Highfield House was a gratifying success. A great many were attracted by the announcement that an aeroplane flight would be attempted and they were not disappointed. The machine – one of the Bleriot type belonging to the Midland Aviation Syndicate – was wheeled to an adjacent field and the aviator made several flights. He would have continued longer but for an accident to the propeller, one of the arms having broken in the course of a descent. The machine was exhibited in a tent until five o'clock when it was wheeled out. A force of police kept the crowd under control. A large field was selected for the start. The fen men, who had never seen an aeroplane before, described it as 'like a self-binder'. There was a large cheer when the aviator took his seat and started the engine. In the first attempt the machine travelled from one end of the field to the other at a height of about 15 feet. It then headed towards Lt Downham and rose beautifully while the crowd cheered. It had travelled some hundreds of yards when the aviator, for reasons best known to himself, descended in a field of corn. In order to facilitate a start for another ascent the aeroplane was taken to a clover patch. There was a considerable delay and the majority of the crowd had returned to the show ground when the machine was seen again to rise to 50 feet but then the aviator planed down to earth again. It did not descend so well as on previous occasions and it was reported that an accident had happened. A proportion of the propeller had broken off. This put an end to the flying and the crowd dispersed, satisfied that a flight had really been made 11 07 28c # c.26.1

A slight outbreak of fire occurred at the Picture Palace, East Road. The heat during the day had been intense and the lantern operator, Harry Pink, became a little faint and accidentally knocked a small piece of film on to the lantern, the heat igniting it. The film soon burnt out and the audience, consisting of 37 children and three adults, walked out without any panic 11 07 28d # c.76.9

Inhabitants of the beautiful village of Bourn have been turning the clock back to days before folk were choked with motor-made dust and dazzled by an air thick with flying machines. The old barn with great creaking doors and without a cobweb removed combined with the incomparable scent and music of a farmyard made a perfect setting for the performance of 'A Legend of Bourn' with scenes of 'Merrie England' when laughter and frolic went hand-in-hand 11 07 28f

A traction engine belonging to Charles Thurston, drawing three show vans was instrumental in setting fire to hedges in three places when passing along the Huntingdon Road near Boxworth. A spark from the engine set a hedge alight near the King William IV Inn, one around Mr Topper's grass field and another belonging to the New Inn where about 100 yards were completely destroyed. The barn was destroyed together with the farm implements, some machinery and a number of fowls. Linton Fire Brigade arrived very promptly and prevented the fire spreading to the hay stacks and other buildings which literally surround the barn and the house. Mr G.H. The Great Eastern Railway says that despite the increase in motor travelling, which renders wealthy people independent of railway trains, the first-class returns show a considerable increase. The third-class returns are also up which is more surprising for the development of tubes and trams in the London suburbs means keen competition. But the second-class passenger seems to be gradually dying out and on many lines has been abolished altogether 11 08 04 # c.26.2

A public meeting was called to deal with objections over land that might be used during the forthcoming military manoeuvres. But no farmer or landowner attended. This was not due to apathy but to the methods adopted by the authorities for making the meeting known. No notice was inserted in Cambridge newspapers so the majority of the population remained ignorant. There would be danger of abortions in breeding ewes and any stock should be removed. A serious fire broke out at Bank Farm, Waterbeach Fen when during the threshing operation the drum 'ran hot' and fired the rye passing through the machine. The exceptional dryness of the woodwork and crops made the fire spread with great rapidity and the threshing drum and elevator were destroyed, the engine narrowly escaping. Three or four haystacks were set alight and farm buildings soon caught fire. A number of newly-painted carriage wheels destroyed but two motor cars were pulled out just in time, both being severely damaged. He placed a lighted candle on the seat of the motor-car but in the very hot weather petrol vaporises rapidly and appears to have reached the flame of the candle igniting it. Cottenham Wesleyans celebrated the completion of their new Sunday School with good attendances at all the meetings in spite of the fact that many were kept away through harvest. The up-to-date building consists of one large room having seating accommodation for 250 with a raised platform at one end. The children have played no small part in the project: at the laying of the foundation stone many of them presented guinea bricks while other gave chairs for the furnishing of the new building. A roll of honour hanging over the platform contains the names of those who contributed 11 08 11g

The Cambridge Electric Theatre Company applied for a cinematograph licence to show inflammable films at the Victoria Assembly Rooms on Market Hill. Only non-inflammable films are currently used but these do not give as clear a picture. The lantern chamber was situated outside the building and was fire-proof with iron shutters to block the two openings in the wall. The hall could seat 280 and be cleared in less than two minutes. But there was no back exit and magistrates refused the application 11 08 11h & 18c # c.76.9

Many willing villagers squeezed the gas out of the balloon and were rewarded for their services. After ten minutes one of Mr King's drivers arrived in a motor car and we were rapidly covered back to the Mammoth Show in time to witness the splendid display of fireworks' 11 08 11i # c.26.1

Girls at Eden Street school Cambridge should be taught domestic subjects and home making such as bed-making, plumbing and white-washing. Ald Campkin thought children ought to learn how to make beds at home and in poorer districts people had very little to cook. A farmer from Clare told the court that he had been troubled by fowls and turkeys straying on his land and eating his barley and corn. But whenever he complained to the wife of the owner of one cottage she claimed the birds belonged to a neighbour. The neighbour said the same thing. One morning he saw a turkey in his barley and tried to drive it off, but as it would not go he got his gun and shot at it. The bird fluttered away, winged. But when he called at the Lion Inn for a gingerbeer he was assaulted and knocked to the ground. Neither the landlord not any of the customers made a move to assist him so he seized a poker and sent for his son. The case aroused much interest. 11 08 18 & a

After glancing round a smartly-dressed woman produced a cigarette case and handed it to her two female companions. Did the other ladies in the room look indignant? Not a bid of it. Grantchester used to be well patronised by tea parties. The landing place was quite a centre of attraction for the villagers. But the hobbledehoy element always asserts itself wherever a few rustics are gathered together with nothing to do and an element of rowdyism was introduced. Visitors have had to run the gauntlet of boorish wit and clownish laughter and boats were interfered with to such an extent that it was unsafe to leave them. The railway strike has begun and its effects are impossible to say. A complete stoppage would paralyse the trade of the country. Meat would be unobtainable and flour and corn exhausted in a week leaving cities starving for bread. No doubt road and river traction would bring some mitigation but fruit and fish would leap to famine prices and without coal no gas or electricity can be produced. Mills, factories and workshops would be closed down for lack of power and the great majority of people become dependent upon public relief. 11 08 18e

The effects of the rail strike are not seriously felt in Cambridge. All trains are running though supplies are considerably delayed with shortages in butter, bacon and petrol. Representatives of the Amalgamated Society of Railway Servants have been in town but only a very few local employees are society men. Cambridge Station is looked upon as a 'fat job'; guards, porters and platform hands know when they are well off and there are plenty of reserve men to take the places of any who come out. 11 08 18h

The dry weather has led to great scarcity of water in many parts and if the drought continues the Army planned manoeuvres might be abandoned. The brooks and ponds in many places are completely dry, rivers are running lower than in living memory and farmers are at their wits' end to know how to provide water for their cattle. Water trains will soon have to be organised thought unfortunately some of the worst villages on the clay hills of Huntingdonshire are remote from the railways. The longest drought since 1887 has happily come to and end and heavy rains have reduced the torrid heat. In Cambridge the hottest day was August 9th when the temperature was 95 degrees in the shade. Messrs Pain's records go back 43 years and the only other record of that figure was on 15th August 1876. During violent thunderstorms lightning set fire to farm buildings at Friday Bridge but the brigade was powerless as there was no water due to the prolonged drought. 11 08 25a

There was considerable excitement near Histon railway station on Wednesday evening when the Army monoplane which has been manoeuvring in the district was seen flying towards the village. When he returned to the military camp at Hardwick about 100 people were assembled and there were crowds of cyclists. Before descending he gave an exhibition flight, swooping round, and although he shot towards the ground with alarming velocity he quickly steadied the machine and sailed gently to earth like a huge bird with a scarcely perceptible jerk as the skids touched the grass. 11 08 25i # c.26.1 # c.45.4

William Marshall applied for a licence to allow him to perform stage plays in a portable theatre to be erected in the Prince of Wales yard, Haverhill. He had obtained one last year, but on applying for it again it was refused. He's also applied for the Corn Exchange, without success. He produced testimonials and a photo of the theatre. But Magistrates did not think the portable theatre was necessary. The Town Hall and Corn Exchange were accessible for theatrical performances and they refused permission. 11 09 01

Scarcely a day passes without a report of some sad fatality, of which a helpless child is generally the victim, due to clothing made of flannelette catching fire. Now the National League for Physical Education (which has an active branch in Cambridge) has issued a pamphlet warning about this material which becomes more and more dangerous each time it is washed. We can ill afford to waste a thousand lives a year and now some manufacturers have developed a flannelette treated with a chemical fire-proof process. 11 09 01d

Aviation is much too expensive to be enjoyed by the ordinary man. But Mr H.W. Holt, a graduate of King's College, has been building from his own patents a machine to carry one person. When finished the 'Dihehededral triplane biplane tandem' will be on of the lightest and smallest of flying machines. The greatest part of the metal work has been done by Mr Holt at the University Engineering Laboratory and the machine is being erected on the premises of Mr Harry Williams in Victoria Park. It should soon be complete and ready for flying 11 09 01e

Large crowds have witnessed successful flights during the week by the Army airmen encamped at Hardwick. Lieut. Cammell, flying his own Bleriot monoplane, was expected to arrive from Hendon shortly after dark on Friday night and petrol flares were lit on the camp ground which acted at once as beacons and as a guide to the most convenient place to land. But at Baldock he ran into a storm and was compelled to alight. 6 a.m. on Saturday. He got the machine out and arrived early next morning. He later made another flight when the sight of the aerial monster combined with the noise it created terrified some farm horses. 11 09 01f

A practical joker drove into Wisbech in a powerful racing car and announced that Grahame-White, the famous airman would fly into the town that evening. A large crowd gathered in a field selected for the landing but there was a high wind blowing and it was announced he had landed at St Ives. The crowds reassembled next morning and scores of cameras were placed in position. But the news broke that the whole thing was a hoax. The man had circulated the same story at March and crowds of people also waited there 11 09 01g

Lieut. Barrington Kennett in his aeroplane descended in a field midway between the villages of Elsworth and Papworth, his flight being interrupted by the wind. Many people went to see the machine, a Bristol biplane no.F8 of the Air Battalion. He resumed his flight next morning, six or seven people being interested enough to view the start at 5am. The aeroplane rose gracefully as a bird and was soon out of sight in the direction of Huntingdon 11 09 01h # c.26.1

Hundon waterworks failure – 11 09 08a

The absence of a proper water supply in many villages has long been a reproach to Sanitary Authorities. Fen villages have been hard put to find sufficient water for drinking, let alone for washing and sanitary purposes. Brooks and wells have failed and the precious liquid has had to be fetched from a distance and doled out at so much per bucketful. This has happened at Pampisford where fourpence a bucketful has been charged. Modern engineering ought to remedy this unsatisfactory state of affairs. 11 09 08c

Cambridge seems to afford congenial soil for the propagandists of peculiar religions. The Christian Scientists and Christadelphians have branches and even Smyth Pigott, the leader of the Agapemonites and founder of the notorious Abode of Lover, has followers. Now Mormons have made half a dozen converts and two young Romsey town women are leaving for America. But the Mormon missionaries deny they are going to Utah: they did not preach emigration but preferred them to stay and help build up churches here 11 09 08c & d # c.83

P.C. John Wallage heard a noise in St John's College garden, looked over the hedge and saw the prisoner pulling up beetroot and putting them in a sack. The man ran off down Madingley Road. When caught he used very bad language and threatened to 'bash his brains out' and shoot him. The language woke a gardener living 100 yards away. Frederick Hutt, gardener at St John's College found the place where some beetroot had been growing: they were very similar to the ones in the sack. The thief was fined ten shillings 11 09 15b # c.18

A number of Cambridge schoolboys 'came out' on strike, some because they had a half-holiday and others because they hadn't. Some say there were several hundred boys and girls carrying 'On Strike' banners and they had chalked the same on the doors of their schools. They held a mass meeting on Christ's Pieces then marched down Emmanuel Street where they came into contact with the police (one constable). The demonstration then collapsed. But teachers say there was no strike. They were not schoolboys but hooligans; they made a disturbance outside the school but the flashing eye of the schoolmaster made them retreat 11 09 15c # c.36.5 # c.32.5

Mr Edwin Saunders had 30 head of cattle on his farm at Nornea. An old cole seed straw stack stood nearly in the centre of the field and the beasts, by rubbing away the sides, had made a mushroom-shaped shelter. When the thunderstorm broke out most of the cattle retreated to the trees but one, a black cow, was huddled against the stack. Lightning struck the stack, firing it and killing the cow instantaneously. So fierce was the heat that it was impossible to drag it clear of the flames. Huge pieces of burning material were blown a considerable distance, some going right over the roof of the farmhouse. A great number of people flocked to the scene from Stuntney and Ely 11 09 15d

The want of water is being seriously felt in Swavesey. All the ponds are practically dry and private pumps are running short. Several farmers have had the new water supply laid on to their yards and fields, and have derived great benefit thereby. The public pumps of the old water supply, hitherto only allowed to be drawn upon for domestic purposes, have been used for farm purposes and have allowed many farmers to obtain water for stock which otherwise have to have been fetched from the river. 11 09 15e

A most welcome break in the long-sustained drought came when the first really wet day for months was hailed with the joy and gladness with which people generally welcome fine weather. Rain fell all day, having a marvellous effect in clearing the air and bringing down the temperature. It was like stepping from blazing August to chill gloomy November. Normally everyone would have been dismal and depressed. But everybody has been thoroughly saturated with sunshine and turned to the mud and drizzle with positive delight, splashing through puddles with utmost cheerfulness. When Mr & Mrs George Verrall went to live at Sussex Lodge, Newmarket, they offered prizes for the best devices of wild flowers by local children. On May Day morning the grounds of the Lodge were full of garland-bearing youngsters. Mr Verrall was interested in the flora and would scan the garlands and note every bloom. He could tell at a glance where certain uncommon flowers, such as the Pasque or Eastern flower, had been gathered. He loved to come across something unusual. It is doubtful whether the prizes gave half the pleasure to the children that the flowers themselves gave to him. 11 09 22 & a

With the exception of damson and late apples, the fruit gathering at Cottenham is nearly over and the trolley loads so numerous a week or two past, are becoming more rare. Cambridge folk will regret the death of Lieut Reginald Cammell, the gallant Army airman who was killed at Hendon while flying a new Valkyrie machine. A case of considerable importance to motorists was heard at court. The issue was whether a motor car coming out of Tenison Road into Station Road took the corner in the proper manner by keeping well over to the left-hand side of the road, or whether the driver 'cut the corner' as many motorists do in order to make the turn as gradual as possible and minimise the strain on the tyres and the machine. This is a 'blind corner', the view being masked on the town side by a high wall and trees. Police looked at the wheel tracks and judged the motorist was at fault for colliding with a taxi cab. 11 09 29a

The proposed way-ticket system would mean a casual who was really tramping for work would present his ticket at the workhouse manager on arrival and have his bath, his supper and bed in the ordinary way. Tons of blackberries have been wasted this year because people have not thought it worth while to gather them. There was an unusually bountiful crop and it would have provided a considerable souse of income for many cottagers. Addenbrooke's Hospital has received plenty of apples and plums and 1,500 lbs of jam have been made for them. Eggs, carrots, potatoes and green stuff are also most acceptable: last year quantities of potatoes and carrots were stored at the Hospital and were still in good condition last July 11 06 06f

Mr C.W. Cooke, coal dealer of Gwydir Street, had been hired to take some furniture to a house at Willingham. The horse then ran off with the van but pulled up with its tail slightly burnt. The whole of the contents including carpet, flower stand, fender and horse brasses were utterly ruined. 11 10 06g

Mr Moorhouse, who was recently an undergraduate in Cambridge, caused a good deal of excitement by making an unexpected decent on in his monoplane on Parker's Piece. He was flying from Brooklands to Huntingdon and was making a good trip in perfect weather when, on nearing Cambridge, which he at first thought to be Huntingdon, he found himself short of petrol. At Trumpington his monoplane was flying at a height of 9,000 feet and then commenced gradually to decend. Mr Moorhouse alighted near the large central electric light standard on Parker's Piece. An immense crowd quickly ascended, the airman's visitors including the Mayor (Ald. George Stace). With some of his college friends, Mr Moorhouse attended a performance of 'Niobe' at the New Theatre and for some hours the monoplane was the centre of attraction. Wheeled up by the University Arms, it was temporarily housed under a tarpaulin and protected by police. The next morning, with 20 policemen keeping the crowd 'clear', Mr Moorhouse left for Huntingdon. 11 10 13 CIPof

Mr Moorhouse paid a second 'flying visit' to Cambridge. The footballers playing on Midsummer Common abandoned their game at once when the machine came into view over Castle Hill. The aeroplane looked as if it must come down among the crowd, but the airman managed the descent very cleverly, and, travelling a short distance only a few feet from the ground, eventually alighted very smoothly rather less than a hundred yards from the railings on the Maid's Causeway side. On his ascent the machine rose gracefully and easily over the trees and the river. It quickly attained a height of nearly 1,000 feet before he made a circle over Chesterton and then sped off towards Huntingdon, He is an intrepid young man of whom more will doubtless be heard in the future 11 10 13b # c.26.1

Sunday was the first day of the annual Willingham Feast and the village was visited by the largest crowd on record during Feast-time. The chief interest centred in the Salvation Army and the People's Mission bands who kept the village in a lively state from early morning until nine o'clock at night. There was a procession of 2,000 persons accompanied by an army of collectors wearing Addenbrooke's Hospital sashes who visited every house. In the evening the usual service was held in the Tabernacle, every inch of standing room being occupied 11 10 13a

Parishioners of Conington celebrated the restoration of their ancient church. The building had been in a dangerous condition when the Rev Kemmis was appointed. Now it has been re-roofed and reseated with new choir stalls and an excellent organ. The bells had not been pealed for 50 years, although one had been strung up in a tree in the churchyard and rung for services. Now they have been recast and re-hung. The restoration has been a good work well carried out, but there is still a heavy deficit to be funded. 11 10 13c

The 1904 Licensing Act gave justices power to close pubs with compensation on grounds of redundancy. Then Cambridgeshire had 675 'on' licences, Cambridge 241; in six years 115 houses had closed, of which 35 were in Cambridge. The 1908 bill had suggested formula for the number of licenses. Under it Cambridge would have had entitlement of 82, a loss of 124 pubs. In Fen Ditton three of the existing pubs would have been closed and customers concentrated into the remaining two. But there was no evidence that a reduction in the number of pubs meant less drunkenness. Some people thought it was a crime for a working man visit to a pub to get a glass of beer but the drink is not the chief attraction: it is the social intercourse. 11 10 27a-c # c.27.4

The Cambridge Society for the Blind was established at a meeting attended by the Masters of several colleges. A motor car drove into Sawston with several undergraduates. They visited the Stores and bought women's hats then commenced their fun by knocking people's hats off in the street and replacing them with those they had bought. The lads next went to the Queen's Head where they compelled the landlord to sit down while they drew the beer. They took pictures from the wall and placed them in the car – but the chauffeur took them back - then quite upset a cinematograph show, one hanging by his toes from a crossbar in the tent. It was a relief to the villagers when the motor left for Cambridge. 11 11 10e # c.36.93

Lolworth church has suffered severely from settlement: serious cracks in the walls of the nave show signs of recent movement; the porch, which is modern, has settled owing to the lack of proper foundations and two brick buttresses show signs of leaving the wall. The cost of repairs is £150. As the parish chiefly consists of farm hands, the Rector has appealed for funds. 11 11 10f

Two daring swindlers victimised a number of University tradesmen by representing themselves as 'Varsitymen and ordering goods to a small amount to be sent to their rooms. They paid with cheques for £5 'from their father' which they got the shopkeeper to cash. The swindlers looked typical undergraduates in grey flannel trousers and tweed jackets, one of them had a gown over his arm. They gave Magdalene as their college and their names were found on the University register. 11 11 10g # c.36.92

'Charles Darwin lived here in 1828' is the inscription in red lettering on a stone tablet recently placed over Arthur Rutter's office in Sidney Street. This is the first tablet of its kind in Cambridge but another one has been put up over 22 Fitzwilliam Street recording that he also lived there. The idea is an excellent one and it is hoped that the example which has been set by the Master of Christ's and members of the Darwin family, will be followed by others 11 11 17 # c.46.45

A new and beautiful organ was dedicated at Elsworth replacing a harmonium which has done service for many years but was unworthy of the noble 13th century church. The Rev C.W. Tibbitts raised the funds with half of the money coming from Andrew Carnegie. After stopping at a blacksmith he saw his brother lying in the road and noticed a mark across the chest of the coat as if the wheels of a cart had passed over it. He was carried home but died ten minutes later. 11 11 24e

There is no doubt that lunacy is steadily increasing owing to the strenuousness of modern conditions. The asylums were never so full as they are today. We have a higher sense of duty to those bereft of reason than obtained fifty years ago and place under restraint cases that would formerly have been allowed to be at large. Fulbourn Asylum is overcrowded and there is no accommodation for further nurses which is especially important as the female side is understaffed. Cottenham housing problems are acute, in some six persons slept in one room. There are 20 people after each house that comes available and if you hear that a man's dying if you don't go before he's dead you don't get the house. The RDC has offered to erect three-bedroom houses if the Parish Council would bear a small burden of the cost. They would have a good garden to help a man pay the rent. But Landlords were concerned that their old cottages might then be left empty 11 12 15 & a

Hauxton School was built on land belonging to the Vicar but is now too small. The County Council offered to buy it or to erect an entirely new one. Instead the Vicar offered to rebuild the old one provided he could continue to provide religious instruction. Children of nonconformists could be withdrawn from these lessons. But the school was built by voluntary subscriptions, it should be returned to the people of Hauxton and instruction left to County Council teachers. 11 12 15h

Cinematographic films were shown in the Guildhall illustrating the Studebaker factory, Detroit where they make a complete car every three minutes. There were miles of aisles and millions of pounds' worth of machinery. Every man has a degree from some technical institute and stays at one machine, ensuring perfection. The finished cars were tested by rushing at break-neck speed over bad roads and ploughed fields. New tyres were substituted as those used in the tests are of little subsequent use. The company is going to take two English motors back to America and pull them to pieces on their machines. 11 12 15b

The problem of rural housing means that it is not only to the towns our youths are flowing, but in ever-growing volume to the colonies. Most villages have given up some of its most promising young men to these dominions beyond the seas. It is not the idlers and the wastrels who are leaving: it is the independent men of spirit who should be the backbone of life in England. Yet a small-holder here, working equally as hard as a Canadian emigrant, can obtain equal return for his labour combined with far greater home comforts and educational advantages for his children. For men prepared to work the old country is by no means played out yet. 11 12 15c

Christmas had not passed without a tragedy as the body of a woman was taken from the river at the Fort St George. She'd gone into Cambridge to fetch a plum pudding from a friend who gave her one every year, and to collect a parcel from the Ickleton carrier. Then she'd met her daughter, a wardmaid at Addenbrooke's Hospital. 'Canada, the land of opportunities and work for all' was the title of a lecture at Orwell by Mr F.O. Chapman accompanied by Mr Alfred Suttle, the well-known shipping agent of Fitzroy Street. He has parties leaving every week and those desirous of emigrating should secure their berths with him. The schoolroom was packed with one of the largest audiences ever seen in the village and the lecture, illustrated by beautiful photographic views, was heartily applauded at the close. Cities were springing up like mushrooms, the wondrous fertility of the soil made husbandry enormously remunerative and the Canadian Government offered any man 160 acres of land free.12 01 05 & a

The need for a proper bathing place for St Ives has been discussed for years. Now a scheme had been formulated for acquiring a portion of the osier holt opposite the parish church with dressing sheds and a rustic bridge. The land had been offered by Mr Wright Ingle for £70. Some opposition was raised on the score of expense but this was silenced by the Mayor volunteering to pay any overspend out of his own pocket. An Inspector had visited the site and found it was flooded. However these floods never lasted more than three weeks, an enquiry was told. 12 01 05b

The business of William Bell and Son was founded in Cambridge in 1794 and has long been one of the leading builders & builders' merchants. It moved its headquarters to Saffron Walden in 1886 where the firm constructed many architectural adornments, notably the Town Hall, Hospital and Friends' School. They also opened up Victoria Avenue, Mandeville Road etc. Its senior partner, Alderman Joseph Bell, was associated with practically every public institution and was one of the oldest Freemasons. Six carriages and 60 employees followed his coffin at his funeral 12 01 05d

Worshippers at Barton parish church were greatly disappointed last Sunday. They waited patiently until about seven o'clock when, as no clergyman made his appearance, the choir began to leave, followed by the congregation. For the last two years the Rev A.L. Phillips has very kindly ministered, quite voluntarily and without payment, and held two services, morning and evening. But last Sunday he had an appointment to preach at Somersham. He found a friend to take the morning service but he could find nobody for the evening one. He accordingly sent word to that effect but owing to some misunderstanding, the congregation was not informed. 12 01 05f

The season of peace and goodwill at Aldreth was marred by a daring burglary on the premises of Martin Wilkin. On the night following Boxing Day the family had retired to bed. The doors and windows were all fastened, a tablecloth covered the remains of the supper and the lamp had been extinguished. But they were awakened by a noise and found the door had been opened, the food had disappeared, the whisky decanter been emptied and the floor was strewn with pieces of bread, meat and cheese together with crumbs from the mince-pies. 12 01 05g

The old year was tolled out at Swavesey and the New Year rung in by the bells of the parish church. At the evening service the Vicar made special reference to the loss the parish had sustained by the dead of Mr H. Beaumont and John Williams who had held the offices of schoolmaster and organist. The Black Horse Inn closed its doors as a public house for the last time having been closed under the Compensation Act. No less that eight licensed houses have been shut up within the last few years. And at Swavesey station yard a number of live queen wasps were found in some heaps of granite. They were promptly destroyed 12 01 05i

A distressing case came before magistrates at Newmarket court. Police were called to Dyson's lodging house where a woman had been told to leave because of her unpleasantness to other lodgers. She had taken her five children into the street where rain was falling in torrents. Police had suggested they go to the Union, out of the wet, but she'd refused, saying "Before I go there I will cut the throats of the lot of them". She was very excitable and had been drinking. They took her to the police station and the children were sent to the workhouse. The woman told the court that her husband had no regular work for two years. They had been turned out of a house in Cambridge as she could not pay the rent. A man had given her sixpence and they'd come by train to Newmarket 12 01 05h

An Excise officer walked into Thomas Hardy's sweet shop in Fitzroy Street at 10.30 one evening and bought a bottle of lemonade, which he drank on the premises. This rendered the shopkeeper liable to a penalty of £20 for 'keeping a refreshment house without a licence'. It is perfectly legal to drink lemonade in the shop until ten at night and after five in the morning but otherwise it is a serious offence. The magistrates dismissed the case. It will act as a warning to those who wish to oblige thirsty teetotallers after the mystic hour of ten 12 01 05j & k

The head teacher of Balsham School appealed against her dismissal. When she took charge of the school it was in too bad a state for any certified master to tackle. But Managers felt the school needed strengthening and that a master should be appointed. It was difficult to judge the work of the children because the syllabus, except for arithmetic, was so vague as to be of little value. Discipline was not satisfactory: there was a lot of talking and corporal punishment was by no means rare, there having been 38 cases since Christmas. 12 01 12b

The six bridesmaids wore Kate Greenaway coats trimmed with swansdown and hats trimmed with mistletoe and holly. Amongst the presents were a silver hot-water kettle, silver egg-stand and toast-rack. Afterwards the bride and groom left for the Riviera. The earliest wedding in the chapel was in 1666. 12 01 12c

The year 1911 was notable in Swavesey. A new water supply was peacefully laid on in spite of meetings and threats of angry opposition. The water appears to have given satisfaction, but the cost of it does not. Farmers found it invaluable for the stock when ponds were empty in the prolonged summer drought. Mr C. Wood succeeded H. Beaumont as headmaster but the Bethel Baptist Chapel was pastorless for a lengthy period and the Parish Council was also without a chairman 12 01 12f

Telephonic communication between the police-station and certain police-officers' houses was discussed. Some police houses were simply hired in an ordinary manner and they might have to move the telephone when a new policeman came to a village and took a different house to his predecessor. At Shelford the call office was only about 20 yards from the constable's house, but you couldn't call him. The Chief Constable said he didn't want a constable sitting in the house waiting to be called. His business is to be outside, looking after the property in the village. 12 01 19

A splendid test of the safety of the New Theatre in the event of an alarm of fire was carried out on Saturday night when it was found that 1,400 people passed from the Theatre in less than four minutes. The audience had no knowledge that a test was taking place and the staff had no orders except to throw open all auditorium doors and emergency exits. The house was crowed to its fullest extent and, as it was pantomime week, there was an exceptional number of children. The result is of particular interest as the New Theatre is to be used periodically as a cinematograph and variety theatre in which people are needlessly nervous of fire 12 01 19b

Thomas Askham was one of the oldest and best-known of Cambridge tradesmen. As a young man he worked for Thomas Hunnybun, the coach builder of Sidney Street, and then founded the coach builder businesses on Newmarket Road, Regent Street and a house in London. But as the motor industry grew, there was less for him to do and he had to employ fewer men. Jointly with Mr Tudor, he built the Hippodrome on Auckland Road, of which he was proprietor at his death. Before the era of the picture palace this place of amusement was exceedingly popular and provided many with healthy enjoyment who would otherwise have been walking the street. 12 01 19c # c.76.9

On Plough Monday it was the custom at Bottisham for ploughboys to have half a gallon of beer at each of the five public houses. Police found two of them drunk in the road. One had collided with a wall and could not get up; he was taken home in a wheelbarrow. The landlord of the Swan Inn said he'd only supplied them with beer. But his wife said she'd served the men with whisky that farmer Woollard had paid for. He confirmed that he'd put sixpence in the ploughboys' box and treated them to whisky. He would be surprised to find men sober who had visited at the public houses in the village. But they were sober when they left. 12 01 26 & a # c.39

The long-sustained wet weather and recent snowfall have brought serious floods. Rising waters have caused the stoppage of the chain ferries to Chesterton, the towing path under Victoria Bridge was submerged and meadows between Grantchester and Newnham are under water. A ride on the Great Eastern Railway from Huntingdon to Cambridge presents a view of an immense lake studded with trees and the large Portholme Meadow is under water to a considerable depth. At St Ives basements in Bridge Terrace and kitchens at Filbert's Walk are flooded. 12 01 26b

Dr Waldstein of Newton Hall says Cambridge is a place where there should be some industry where people who are often idle might be employed. There are women who work - bedmakers for instance - who have husbands who do not. Some years ago he tried a scheme for wood carving but it fell through and the local clay is not right for pottery. Now he proposed the establishment of a heraldic bureau to become a centre of inquiries from architects and provide private individuals with authoritative information on family coats of arms. 12 01 26f &g # c.58

The question of providing an adequate water supply to rural areas is attracting a great deal of attention. One cottage at Caxton stood a quarter of a mile from the village pump and, except for the rain water caught from the roof, they had to carry every drop of water from the pump. The family was a large one and they did their own laundry work, so one could guess how many journeys would be made in the course of a week in the hot, dry weather. Yet they refused to have water laid on and the Parish Meeting had unanimously opposed a supply. However it was the District, not the Parish Council, who was responsible. Old prejudices are deep rooted and a rural population notoriously slow in absorbing a new idea. If they neglected their duty the Medical Officer would bring pressure to bear on them. 12 01 26 d & e & h # c.24.2

A conference on rural water supplies heard that many villages are supplied with drinking water from shallow wells just a few yards from a leaky cesspool or privy-pit. These often leak: the emptying of such receptacles is very unpleasant work and if they are made water-tight needs doing more frequently so it often happens that a crowbar is used to make a water-tight cesspool leaky. The roofs of average village cottages are scarcely desirable gathering grounds for drinking water but often the water thus collected and stored underground is infinitely safer than from wells and being soft is usually preferred for use in tea making and cooking 12 02 02a Constance Cochrane evidence – 12 02 02b # c.21.1 # c.24.2

Ghostly rappings on the back door of a cottage at Tydd-street, St Mary, a village near Wisbech are causing great excitement. At first the noise was supposed to be the work of a practical joker, but constant watching disproved that theory. The noises occurred between nine in the morning and seven in the evening. On Wednesday fully 100 people assembled round the cottage and the noises were distinctly heard by all. The owner of the cottage has consulted two Wisbech spiritualists and nothing has been heard of the knocking since then. 12 02 02e # c.39

The accumulation of duties from which the County Council is suffering as increased the amount of work to be got through at the quarterly meetings. Yesterday's lasted from ten in the morning until half-past three in the afternoon and most of the members had drifted out long before the end. There is a tendency to rush things and a general spirit of indifference due to weariness of the flesh. Chairmen of committees tend to leave the chamber when they have piloted through their own reports. Some alteration must be made. 12 02 02g # c.35.2

A new County Hall is needed. The existing clerk, a solicitor in private practice, works from his own office. Whittlesford needs four cottages for the working classes, but £800 was too dear, councillors decided. The Medical Officer said some people could not get married because they wanted cottages and some would not live in the present ones because they were insanitary. During the last 25 years only two new cottages and four bungalows had been built in the village. Sons and daughter of old residents had got married and gone to live outside the parish as had many single men. People had to wait two or three years before they can get a house – even the minister had to stay in lodgings for some months. – 12 02 09a

The manager of the Coronation Hotel, Newmarket was awakened by his dog and found smoke coming into the room through the chinks in the doorway. On opening the door he was met by a volume of smoke pouring in from the corridor. Finding the usual outlet to the street barred he went round to the back and lowered himself by a knotted sheet from a window. The heat of the flames cracked the liqueur and spirit bottles which added to the flames but six dozen bottles of Bass, when broken, assisted in extinguishing them. 12 02 09f

The weather was brilliant and the ice splendid for the race for Littleport Skating Club's 50-guinea challenge cup. There was a strong wind blowing down the course, the winner of the toss having the advantage of the shelter of the spectators after the last turn, this accounting for one or two wins. This wind made the necessity of three races a trying ordeal. After a dispute over the toss in the final round C. Fire destroyed a large part of the first chicory factory in England, that of J.A. Wootten of Cambridge, at Fenstanton. The caretaker had been using an American oil stove in which he burnt paraffin oil and found the room was on fire. Thinking to extinguish the flames, he threw water on the stove, which caused the oil to run all over the room and enabled the flames to spread rapidly. The brigade tried to pump water from a pond but found the pipes were frozen and the work of saving the factory had to be delayed while they were thawed with boiling water obtained in saucepans from neighbouring cottages. Fortunately the machinery was saved together with the bond room containing two tons of manufactured chicory. 12 02 09g

Sir – In recent years many parishes have had their church bells re-hung in metal cages, instead of in oak cages, which was the old method. This is likely to harm old church towers. A properly-constructed bell-cage stands clear of the walls so that the timbers can spring and a minimum of jar is transmitted to the tower. When metal cages are fixed rigidly the vibration loosens the masonry and cracks the walls, causing damage not easily repaired. Old towers are valuable works of art: who is happy to risk damage coming to them? – A.R. Powys. 12 02 23i # c.69.6

St Ives licensed victuallers were told that under a new Act they had to give staff an afternoon off every week. In addition nobody could be employed for more than six hours without a break of at least 20 minutes while three-quarters of an hour had to be allowed for dinner – or an hour if the meal was not taken on the premises. One man complained that he kept a roadside house and was in private employ. If he had to give his wife a half-holiday each week he would either have to shut the house up or lose a half-day's work. 12 03 01

The bridge over the brook at Burrell's Walk should be replaced with one a foot higher so as to prevent it being covered with water in time of flood. The horse took fright at something and backed down the bank – which is very steep – into the river. It got across to the Horningsea side, then turned round and came back as far as it could where it had to stay until the men reached it with the boat. A slight mishap occurred at the Milton level crossing when the down gate was smashed by the 6.05 pm train from Cambridge to St Ives. Beyond the smashing of the gate and some slight damage to the brakes, due probably to the sudden stopping of the train, no damage was done. A mock funeral started from the "corpse's" lodging in Lensfield Road. There was a long line of taxis, hansoms and even four-wheelers stretching some distance down Trumpington Street. There was no elaborate "hearse" as in previous funerals: the body was placed quite simply in a hansom bearing the words "Alas! My poor brother" and smoked cigars throughout. His "cabby's" hat was draped with crepe while the majority of the fancifully-dressed mourned wore complimentary black-eyes out of respect for the 'deceased'. If the coal strike continues more than three weeks Cambridge will be faced with a bread famine. One of two of the leading bakers have supplies of fuel and flour to last about five weeks but a small baker consumes over a ton of coal a week and has little storage capacity. If the coal merchants cannot keep the bakers going, there will be no bread. Flour might be available and those people with stocks of coal or gas ovens might bake their own bread but the poor would be hit very hard. 12 03 08c # c.32.5

Whatever hardships may be inflicted on Cambridge inhabitants through the coal strike, it is improbable that their linen will have to go unwashed. Most laundries have a good supply of coke. The situation at Haverhill is generally favourable: Messrs Gurteen, the staple industry, has ample supplies but the coal merchants are nearing exhaustion. However at Saffron Walden the street lamps have not been lighted for two nights and the gas has been at a lower pressure. Ely has not been affected to any considerable extent. The governing factor is the supply of coal. In proportion to the size of the city the coal merchants are fairly numerous and they hold between them a stock of fuel which will meet requirements for four or five weeks. However prices are rising and the cost of a ton of coal at Littleport is nearing 40 shillings. Like the coal merchants, the local bakers are keeping well in touch with what is happening. The price of bread is at the moment as usual but it is becoming a serious question as to whether there should not be an advance and it cannot be delayed should the strike go on for a few days longer, for it is not the happy lot of every Ely baker to be well stocked with the necessary fuel. Gas and water are likely to hold out longer than perhaps anything else. The Gas Works say that under strike conditions, light will be available for some 12 or 13 weeks, if not longer. The Isleham Waterworks too are well off for fuel, sufficient to carry them on for a considerable period. This will come as a great relief to the citizens who still remember their plight at Christmas when water was cut off for nearly two days. The local brewers had taken the precaution to make in large stocks of coal. To sum up the situation in Ely, the city is not being as badly hit as many towns appear to beEly not alarmed – 12 03 08c 12 03 08d # c.32.5

At present a police constable is entitled to a pension after serving 25 or 26 years on the beat. This is as much as most men are able to stand, including as it does a share of night work in all weathers. Policemen who are past their prime, unless by unusual intelligence they have risen from the ranks, are of little use in the Force and the value of their retention is doubtful. But to reduce their pay is astounding. The present sum was fixed more than 30 years ago when living was much cheaper, duties were less exacting and men of a much lower grade of intelligence were considered suitable. It means that the residents will now be under the care of the Cambridge Town Council. 12 03 29c # c.35.7

The last meeting of the old Town Council rejected proposals to reduce policemen's wages. Thirty years ago any burly ruffian that could knock a man down was supposed to be good enough for a policeman. Today police must be courteous and tactful, able to render first-aid and resourceful in emergency. The presence of thousands of undergraduates made the work more trying and it says much for the present Force that even during a 'rag' there is seldom any friction of a vicious character between the 'Varsityman and 'Robert'. They must be incorruptible: often a policeman is offered a bribe to 'say nothing about it'. Yet in Cambridge the commencing wage is lower than at Oxford or Peterborough. 12 03 29b # c.34.7

Amond Cannell, gamekeeper of Trumpington, told the court he had set three iron rat traps in a field near the road. When he returned next morning they had gone. Det-Serg Marsh went to the Butcher's Arms lodging house and asked two men how they accounted for hawking rat traps on East Road the previous day. They claimed to have bought them from a man near the Catholic Church for threepence. They were sent to gaol for a month. 12 03 29a

Two labourers were charged with stealing a shawl from an Arab pedlar. Rahmount Arab Benmenouar, a dealer in Oriental goods, said "One pinched me one white shawl in my left hand and the other broke me box with the necklace". When he'd asked for them back they'd threatened to strike him. Police said a box containing some imitation pearls had been broken. Nothing had been found on the accused and they were given the benefit of the doubt. 12 03 29

It was wicked for the council to pull down insanitary houses without building cottages for the people displaced. Where were the people turned out to go? Landlords were getting twelve shilling a week for a cottage divided up amongst seven families. In one house there were five occupiers of six rooms, one family having two and the others one room each. They each paid four-shillings a week whereas the normal rent was only three shillings, councillors were told. 12 03 29d & e # c.23

Work on the new schools in Melbourne Place is practically at a standstill owing to the strike and 50 men are idle. The contractors cannot get delivery of the facing bricks they require. "We have several thousand blue bricks on the rail somewhere between Staffordshire and Cambridge" said Mr C. Kidman. "We are promised red bricks a month after the brickmakers receive coal but they cannot get any". An interesting little machine with massive steam-powered steel jaws was champing up bricks from the curious little row of cottages which had no back premises and no back windows. Five trees had been cut down to provide log for fuel for the engine. 12 03 29f # c.35.8 # c.36.5

Luke Hosegood is retiring from Cambridge Workhouse after 42 years, 36 as Master. During his long service he has made it a model institution as far as the limitation of the old-fashioned building will allow. When a vacancy for Master and Matron occurred in 1876 the Guardians, without advertising, selected them. Their daughter is assistant matron and their son honorary organist. Sir –Milton cemetery is a disgrace to civilisation. There is so much water almost standing within three feet of the surface (it having never been drained) that it is impossible to dig a decent grave there at all. The graves are never dug more than five feet down. The gravedigger has thrown up his job in disgust as the stench that comes through from the other graves with the water. He has to bale out the water until the funeral procession enters the cemetery then put an armful of straw in the bottom to hide the water from the mourners. – Bertram Pearson 12 04 05c

It was in the occupation of Mrs Abbott, widow of a former schoolmaster; one room was used by the Lode Institute. One of the ancient University privileges is the power to grant licences for the sale of foreign wines. Licences have been granted to Bursars or stewards of colleges, college butlers or managers of college kitchens and to the custodian of Fitzwilliam Hall. Hotel keepers, grocers, chemists, confectioners, restaurant keepers, the manager of the refreshment room at the railway station and wine merchants also have a Vice-Chancellor's licence which is free. A Cambridge man, Percy Wilson, has written from Montreal painting a gloomy view of the situation in Canada. It is not what it is cracked up to be. Starvation and poverty is rife during the very severe winters and many immigrants are misled by glowing and exaggerated accounts of the country and climate. One is constantly told there are no poor in Canada. Yet the 'Morning Albertian' reports that the number of nameless graves of unknown people who have died of starvation would astonish the inhabitants. The truth is that the man who more or less starves all the time in Britain will more or less starve at times in Canada. People requiring more facts can write to Mr Wilson at his parent's address, 4 Auckland Terrace, Cambridge. 12 05 03j # EMIGRATION

The West Wratting parish constable was dismissed: a man had used abusive language to Fred Pitts, bailiff to Mr E.P. Frost. "New Tunes to Hymns, Ancient and Modern" is the title of a little collection composed by the Rev Richard Owen of St Giles' Vicarage and published by Mr A.J. Gillson of Cambridge. In these days of multitudinous hymnals, when every church, sect and connection has its own original compilation of hymn tunes, cribbed and purloined from each other, one seeks the reason for any fresh one. This one is intended for a practiced body of choir singers, the stanzas are unsymmetrical and the rhythm is unconventional. Councillors should consider a footbridge over river near Fort St George ferry. If anyone saw the large amount of people who passed over the ferries and the waste of time entailed they would agree that a bridge was most desirable. The system was antiquated and in times of flood they had to rely on Victoria Bridge only. Last winter when the river was running high, the custodian had chained the ferry up to the lamp post. There had been a sum of money guaranteed when it was proposed to put the bridge opposite the end of De Freville Avenue but the scheme fell through because of the large sum required to purchase the land to get through Jesus College boat yard. – 12 05 17c & d

Swavesey parish council considered whether to postpone the village feast in view of the outbreak of scarlet fever in Market Street. It was their duty to prevent the spread of the disease by visitors and the show people carrying infection away with them. The warnings about scarlet fever had the effect of keeping both visitors and show people away and Swavesey feast can hardly be said to have taken place at all. On Sunday the streets were quieter than usual, on Monday just three stalls and a cocoanut shy were erected. An enterprising tradesman from Cambridge put in an appearance but soon packed up, disappointed. Cambridge police are dealing with the question of dangerous driving in the town. Our narrow and crowded streets are ill-fitted for fast traffic, yet motorists and motor-cyclists tear about them as though they were on a racing track. A speed that is safe on the open road may be dangerous in narrow streets. Indeed it is questionable whether any speed over eight miles an hour is ever safe in Cambridge. There have been several prosecutions this week, including that of a chauffeur fined for driving at 12mph who knocked over an old man who was crossing the road. Undergraduate motorists

An unusually violent thunderstorm broke over Longstanton with a blinding flash of lightning being followed by a tremendous clap of thunder. Near the railway station a horse belonging to Mr T Langan of Willingham was so alarmed it dropped down in the road and after getting up trembled for some time afterwards. At Hatton's Farm considerable damage was done, sixteen panes of glass being smashed by the concussion. The lightning struck the garden, made a hole in the soil and passing underneath it ploughed up two rows of potatoes. Mr W.J. Wayman of Over, who was erecting some cottages near by, took shelter in a hovel and was knocked backwards while Mrs Few was so much upset that she has since been ill 12 06 07i

During the thunderstorm at Fowlmere Frederick Smith, employed by Mr F.S. Woodcock, farmer, had a narrow escape. He was ploughing on the Bury Road when he and the team seemed enveloped in a sheet of flame. He was rendered unconscious by the shock and when he recovered the horses had travelled some 30 yards or more. One of them seemed paralysed and the sight of one eye is damaged. It has still not regained the use of its limbs and there seems little hope of its recovery. Two other labourers were so dazed by the flash of lightning that they state they never heard any thunder at all – 12 06 07n

Spring Close, Burwell, which includes the site of Burwell Castle which was held for King Stephen against the rebellious Mandeville, will be offered for sale by auction. It should be purchased by the Parish Council and preserved as an open space to remind future generations of the part played by the village in the history of England in the days when High Town was a Norman residence and Newnham a Saxon village, when the church stood where the boys' school now stands and the dead were buried where schoolboys now cultivate their beds of garden. Should the cost – about £500 – be too great the council should ensure the site is preserved from any interference 12 06 07o

When retiring Stationmaster, George Kimm, first came to Cambridge the Superintendent's office was on the old island platform that stood opposite the present platform before it was lengthened. There was a bridge by which passengers reached it but all luggage was transferred by means of a trolley and then shouldered by porters to a cab or van for conveyance to its destination. This caused very great delay, especially at the beginning or end of term, and it was largely for the convenience of the University that the present long single platform was made. It was opened in October 1863. He has seen the opening of the Haverhill and Sudbury line amongst others, welcomed Royalty. Stretham fen accident described: the balance-weight of the engine of an express train fell off just as a down express was approaching, and, the weight rolling on to the line, threw the down train into the dyke. A number of people were injured. Litigation followed and the company were found liable 12 06 07k # c.26.2

Wasp shooting is to be the pastime of the summer and the Queen has accepted a wasp gun, the deadly weapon invented for the new sport. It is a simple but wonderful contrivance. It has neither powder nor shot – but it has jaws. It is cocked by pulling back a lever till it is caught by the trigger. You then pursue your wasp, wait until it is in front of the open jaws, jump the gun forward and pull the trigger.

Your wasp should be found flattened between the gun's jaws. Doubtless before the season is over we shall have country house wasp-shooting parties and in the fruit-growing districts championship meeting with gold cups for prizes. The wasp has never had many friends and it is only to be expected that the summer will see a terrible massacre. 12 06 21

The Cottenham miller said that when the landlord gave up in 1916 he'd rented the windmill from him but began to get behind with the payments about 12 years ago. One of his men embezzled money and then hung himself. That took all the money he was using for trading purposes and he never recovered. In Cottenham they'd taken to growing fruit instead of corn and that had made pounds of difference to him. Latterly business had got so bad he could not find the cash to send his cart out to get a load of stuff to keep at work so he thought it was time to do something. 12 06 21

Police Inspector Chevill testified that he saw a traction engine drawing three empty wagons travelling at a fast rate and got on his bike to follow. The driver went through Caxton village at about ten miles an hour – the limit was two mph. When he stopped at the bridge to take on water the driver said he'd put the brakes on when going down the hill but they were a bit greasy. If there had been anybody in the way they must have been run over. There had been several narrow escapes from accidents in the village through the defendant's negligent driving. He was fined twenty five shillings. 12 06 21b

For the first time in Cambridge a service under the auspice of the Showman's Guild was held at Midsummer Fair when about 650 people assembled in Mr Charles Thurston's tent. The Rev T. Horner, preacher, began life as a showman and after taking Holy Orders his heart was still with the showmen and he had given himself to the work. At the Midsummer Horse Fair trade was none too brisk. Mr Pink had a drove of 80 unbroken Welsh cobs and ponies, there were a few cart horses, half-a-dozen mares and a good number of nondescript cart and nag horses 12 06 21f # c.27.3

Poorer Cambridge used to house itself in courts tucked away behind the streets. Some of them are now mere empty sites from which the wretched buildings have been cleared away. They are not even building sites. The requisite amount of space under the present laws is lacking even for one dwelling where they may perhaps have been half a dozen. Others contain old cottages which will come down when others can be built for the occupants. In the meantime disposed families herd in with other families. The Borough Council have applied for a loan to provide new dwellings but the amount of bricks and mortar bears no proportion to that applied to the University 12 06 28 & a # c.23 # c.30

A crowd of about 10,000 watched Mr H. Ewen, the 'Daily Mail' airman give a flying demonstration from the University O.T.C. parade ground. The Caudron biplane was wheeled out of the enclosure and the engine started up. He ran along the ground for about 150 yards then rose into the air amidst the cheers of the crowd. On reaching a height of 600 feet he flew over Grantchester and Trumpington. The wind was too treacherous for him to attempt any risky manoeuvres but the public were quite satisfied and cheered as he landed. Mr Ewen was called upon for a speech but felt he had given a 20 minutes exhibition and had done his task. 12 06 28e

During a meeting at Linton Workhouse a member of the Board of Guardians placed his straw hat on the hat stand before entering the Board Room. When the meeting was over he was astonished to find that it had been taken and that a disreputable-looking cap had been left in its place. No one had been seen to enter the building and the occurrence surprised all. Fortunately he was able to borrow a cap to wear home. During the past fortnight 63 tramps had visited the home against 27 in the same period last year. 12 06 28j

Four labourers appeared in court for using a net at Somersham and taking a jack value one shilling. Sometimes the river had to be dammed and the Lower District Commissioners considered that fishing, such as spearing for eels, damaged the dams. There was a notice prohibiting angling and it had been publicly cried at Chatteris. Just one man, Michael Gray, had permission to use a rod and line in return for certain favours he performed for the Commissioners. The accused said they had fished the drain for 20 years river and knew nothing about a ban. They were each fined half-a-crown (about £12 at today's values) 12 07 12a

Chesterton workhouse has been criticised by a lady inspector. The nursing staff was totally inadequate at the time of her visit with a solitary nurse on duty in the sick wards doing the work of three. The lady visitor may be somewhat faddy but there must be some foundation for her strictures. 12 07 12d # c.32.9

A whirligig proprietor was fined for driving stakes into the soil of the village green at Burrough Green. Alfred Ward, (69), said the Green had been a recreation ground as long as he could remember. The fair followed the public houses: 40 years ago it was near the White Hart but when that closed it moved to the Bull. The showmen had pitched on both side of the Green from time immemorial. Landowner Robert Lacey said that when he bought his estate the Green was measured in with it and he paid tithes on it. He had no objection to its use. The Parish Clerk had refused permission but the man had ignored him and a swinging boat proprietor had also parked wagons on the Green. The Medical Officer's report on pure milk supplies includes excellent photographs showing the good caused by pulling down old cow sheds and their replacement with up-to-date buildings. There are 305 milch cows in Cambridge, kept by 30 cowkeepers, but a large number of purveyors buy supplies from Huntingdon, Norfolk and Buckingham while cream is brought from as far away as Wiltshire or Somerset. The average consumption is less than half-a-pint per head per day. Amongst the poorest milk is a luxury and used chiefly in tea. The practice of ladling out milk from a deep can is a source of contamination: the milkman's hand may enter it or rain and dust get in when the lid is removed. 12 07 19b # c.27

Whether one is in favour of militancy or not, the courage of those ladies who use it as a means for gaining the vote for women cannot be denied. Two ladies stood on Market Hill on Friday evening and faced the jeers and derision of a gang of rowdy youths who did all they could to make the meeting a farce. Mr A.G. Markham, the ex-holder of the 100 miles' world's tricycle record and present holder of the 24 hours' Eastern Counties tricycle record, covered the splendid distance of 192 miles in twelve hours. For over 60 miles he had to struggle with a dead head wind which blew with tremendous strength across the open fenland. To make things worse, at 140 miles his stomach went wrong and he went all to pieces. Four times he gave up the ride as hopeless but his followers would not let him rest and after dosing him with brandy and bathing his head they managed to keep him at it. It is doubtful if any other man of his age – he is 44 and has been taking part in violent athletics for 26 years – would have done such a ride. 12 08 02aa

The County Council had considered various sites for a new County Hall. The purchase price of Hobson Street Methodist Chapel was £3,500 (£324,000 today) which was fair. In the chapel they had a good deal of material and the shell and outside walls would stand and be utilised. But it would not be sufficient. So they needed to purchase a house from Christ's College; they were not desirous of selling and the price of £2,500 was the least they would accept. The erection of county hall would increase the value of the other buildings in Hobson Street and help to bring a much-needed town improvement through the widening of Sussex Street. 12 08 09 # c.35.1

The great disappointment experienced by members of the fair sex in Linton last year when the Army Manoeuvres were abandoned has made their excitement this year very much keener. Tremendous rivalry exists amongst some of the damsels as to which shall be the first to sight the coming of the khaki coast and above all to be the first to welcome the gallant men. Some officers are dashing around in a motor car but it will be some time before any of the soldiers are actually stationed in a large camp in the field below the station 12 08 23m

At the University Extension Summer Meeting Dr Alex Hill gave a lecture on 'Universities of the Empire'. After speaking in a most interesting way on the origin, functions, privileges and customs of universities for 55 minutes, the lecturer suddenly took out his watch and said, "I came here to lecture on the Universities of the Empire, and I haven't got there yet". He then asked for the hall to be darkened and showed a number of lantern slides. 12 08 23 f & g; lessons of the meeting 12 08 23n # c.27.9

Youths and children clustered closely to the lorry from which Mrs Brailsford was speaking to the crowds on Parker's Piece; they pushed it six inches in one direction, then a foot back. The crowd moved with it. Then it was pushed right across towards Park Terrace. She thanked the boys for the nice ride and picked up her speech exactly where she'd left it. The lads then pushed her into the middle of a cricket match before a policeman chained up one of the back wheels. Later they scrambled on to the lorry and tore up the 'Votes for Women' papers. "For a University town, it is absolutely disgraceful, I never had such a thing happen before, not even in Whitechapel", she said before heading down Regent Street followed by a crowd, booing and shouting 12 08 23i # c.33

A remarkable exhibition of scientific instruments at the Cavendish Laboratory excited amazement amongst professors. The possibilities of the computating machine are amazing; the handling of an indicator and the turning of a crank accomplishes feats of addition, multiplication, division and subtraction in a manner that would confound a Senior Wrangler. One would not imagine that a machine could be produced that would deal as easily with English coinage as with decimal. It makes man wonder whether in time he will not make something in all respects superior to himself 12 08 30 & a # c.27.5

Three skulls and a number of bones dug up on the site of the new Wesleyan Church at the Four Lamps have given rise to some interesting speculations. The site was open space until Mr Clayton built a house in comparatively recent times. It is probable that a gallows stood very near as there were four cross roads and an ancient charter mentions 'ubi homo suspendus fuit'. It seems the skeletons may be the remains of three people who met an untimely death in medieval times. 12 08 30b # c.41

Many men who have been thrown out of work at Fen Drayton owing to the floods have found time hanging heavily. About a dozen of them were seen amusing themselves by playing a game of marbles on a dry spot at the side of the main street. Many families are obliged to live in upstairs rooms. One cottager, the lower part of whose property is under water and who had to live upstairs in rooms without a fireplace, got over the difficulty of cooking by using a ladder as a bridge to the kitchen stove, where the fire burned brightly. On Wednesday daily newspapers were delivered by means of a raft. 12 08 30m

Littleport suffered badly in the heavy and continuous rain. The rushing water from the Hemp field flooded the main street between the Granby Hotel and Hitches Street, running into the shops of Mr

Fitch and Mr Secker. The steam fire engine made some attempt to pump the water away, but was not very successful. At Haddenham the inhabitants were aroused by the 'Town Crier', Mr Pope, who called upon every man to go down to the Cut Bank or the fen would be 'drownded'. After toiling for hours with railway sleepers the danger was averted. But the crops were partly submerged and the water entered farm cottages forcing several families to beat a retreat 12 08 30n

The Mile Bank at Littleport has been flooded as never before since the draining of the fens has been carried out by machinery. When the Fen engines needs overhauling the work is invariably carried out in the summer when, under normal circumstances, their services are not required. It is a slice of bad luck that it is undergoing repair just when it is wanted and hence water is remaining on thousands of acres. The Commissioners are taking steps to substitute another kind of engine. Meanwhile harvest operations are out of the question except where the labourers are working in top-boots 12 08 30o

Patrol Leader Howard Swift of the Boy Scouts saw the party were in difficulty and the swollen stream was running with great power. A few nights ago the guard of the motor mail van from Cambridge to London saw a number of women on telegraph poles near Potter's Bar. He reported what he'd seen when he arrived at the General Post Office and an electrician was despatched. He found fourteen trunk telegraph wires had been cut. A notice in printed letters had been affixed to one of the poles where the women had been seen, stating that the damage was entirely due to the attitude of the Liberal Government towards the Suffragists. The big white cockatoo on the lawn at the Bridge Hotel, Clayhithe, was having an altercation with the toucan. With her crest erect and her head close to the bars of her cage she was glaring and shrieking at the toucan that shares with several marmosets the big cage hard by. One young lady of 18 months had a biscuit in her chubby fist and presently toddled up to the cockatoo's cage and held it out. Cockie promptly stopped her scolding and accepted the proffered tit-bit. Soon the morsel was devoured. A low, chattering noise from the toucan's cage attracted attention to several of the prettiest little monkeys imaginable; they were not impressed with our English climate and refused to come out of their snug nest. Cambridge Prison warden, C. Corby – interesting reminiscences of 30 years – 12 09 06l & m
Mr C. Corby of Beaconsfield Terrace, Victoria Road, is retiring as Chief Warder of H.M. Prison at Cambridge. He transferred to Cambridge prison on August 25th 1882. At that time structural alterations were taking place. He took charge of the 10 to 12 prisoners at the work of excavation, levelling the ground and filling in the old moat running from Castle Hill around the back of the governor's garden and towards the County Police Station. There was also the work of digging the foundations for a new boundary wall adding about an acre of ground to the prison premises.
New hospitals for both males and female prisoners were also added and the prison gateway, which up to that time had only been large enough to allow a barrow to pass through, was replaced by the present one. This added a great deal to the convenience of the prison with regard to the transport of both prisoners and goods. D wing, which was at that time the debtors' part was altered for the reception of female prisoners, which up to that time had been lodged at Huntington Jam which was afterwards closed. For six or seven years he was in charge of some 15 prisoners both inside and outside at their work. The average number of prisoners at Cambridge at that time was about 80 but that number must often have been exceeded for the accommodation of the prison was 103 or 413, including the reception wards, and transfers had often to be made to Bedford and elsewhere.
During this time, there was only one prisoner who escaped from Cambridge. He had been employed scraping lime wash off the walls and manage to hide his scraper in his cell. During the night he removed several bricks with his scraper and made a hole in the roof of his cell, placing his blankets on the floor to dead and the sound of any falling material. Early next morning an Officer found it impossible to enter the cell, the bed having been placed against the door. I got up on the roof in the dark and found that the prisoner had got over the boundary wall with a ladder which he had found. He had let himself down the other side with a rope, which he had also managed to hide in his cell and escaped by means way of Hartford Street. He was rearrested at Dunmow, brought back in handcuffs and leg irons and was ordered to receive 18 strokes with the cat. Considerable changes have been made in prison routine. Punishments for misbehaviour inside the prison were more severe than they are now. The Dark Cells have been abolished for 20 years. Conditions of service are better. The hours of duty for the lower ranks are shorter though warders all over the country are complaining with regard to their pay. 12 09 06l&m

Sir - Cambridge fruit costs more on Cambridge market than in London since most cannot be sold locally at any price and is sent to larger towns. Good apples were sent from Histon to Manchester that were sold for a shilling per half bushel. Expenses consumed 10d and the grower got only 2d. But in his own market the grower tries to sell at remunerative prices. The only people who can sell cheaper than market traders are the hawkers. His Majesty the King visited the Hardwick aero camp where he spoke to Colonel S.F. Cody, and inspected his famous biplane. The King then commanded Col Cody to make a short exhibition flight. In a few seconds the plane was in the air, making several circuits, flying both high and low before pulling up gracefully within a few yards of the Royal party. Chesterton Road was the scene of a very remarkable fire. A motor lorry belonging to Messrs Sturton of Fitzroy Street, laden with cans of petrol was totally destroyed. The highly-inflammable spirit became ignited and a fire of extraordinary fierceness blocked the road with a sheet of flame. Can after

The flames leapt to an astonishing height, reaching above the tops of houses and were accompanied by volumes of black, oily smoke. An Ely Diocesan report on housing conditions says that the greatest sufferers are the mothers of families. The fathers go out all the day to work, the children are in school but the women are anchored in the house. The combined effect of insufficient space, bad sanitation, poor water supply and air deprived of oxygen produces a kind of torpor which disinclines her to any exertion and she cannot control high-spirited children who seek amusement in the streets. Cambridge Medical Schools recently applied to Chelmsford Guardians for unclaimed bodies of paupers for dissecting purposes. These are indispensable for the education of a surgeon. Prof Courtney Kenny refutes the belief that a person has no legal right to bequeath his own body for anatomical examinations. However the deceased relatives can require the body to be interred without such examination 12 10 18i # c.21.2

Charles Lack, head of the well-known firm of Messrs Lack & Son, engineers of Cottenham, died peacefully. He possessed an intimate knowledge of the geological strata and has advised various bodies in matters relating to water supply and sewage. A native of Willingham, he showed mechanical abilities of a high order and commenced business in 1871 on the same spot where the works enlarged and equipped on modern lines now stand. Conscientious in all his dealings, he was respected alike by employers and employed. Workmen digging at the rear of a shop in Peas Hill discovered the skeleton of a man and women, lying side by side. Nearby is the site of an old monastery and the assumption is that the remains were found in a former burying-ground. If so it knocks the bottom out of one of the best ghost stories in Cambridge, involving a wealthy banker whose young, beautiful wife took a lover who then disappeared. Half a body was later discovered in excavations at the Bijou Theatre Club's cellars. Now it appears they may all be linked. 12 10 18j # c.39 # c.43

Messrs King and Harper's magnificent new motor garage and showroom in Bridge Street is one of the most commodious in the Eastern Counties. It has accommodation for over 100 motor cars and several hundred motor cycles, there is a large stock of new and second-hand machines and the workshops are completely equipped with up-to-date plant driven by electric power. It is on three storeys with an electric lift capable of conveying the largest car to the top floor in a few seconds. The architect is Sidney French and the builder J. Brignell of Newmarket Road. 12 10 25 # c.26.484

Rev Newling drew attention to the state of a cottage at Isleham in which an old man and woman lived. It was built of clunch, was about 100 years old & the walls had no foundation. When the woman was going to bed the floor of the bedroom sank down to the basement. The owner was giving the matter his attention - he is rebuilding that part of the cottage that fell down. But there are numerous other cottages in similar condition. 12 10 25a

P.C. Smith told the court he was in plain clothes in Trinity Street when he saw an eleven-year-old boy carrying his cap in his hands. It looked rather bulky and was found to contain walnuts. The lad admitted he'd put his hand through a hole at the back of Whitehead's stall on the market and taken them. His mother said he was unruly at home and went out in the evening when he had no business to do so. Magistrates sentenced him to six strokes of the birch. If he re-offended he would be sent to the reformatory school 12 10 25aa

A resident of Fletcher's Yard, off Abbey Street, told the court he was sitting in his house late on a Friday night when two bricks and two pails full of ashes were thrown through the window, smashing it and breaking a mirror, some pictures and ornaments. He saw his neighbour throw the second pail. The accused admitted breaking the windows, but not breaking the ornaments saying the man and the woman he lived with were always fighting on Friday nights. He was fined ten shillings 12 10 25b

Alterations to Castle End Institute Mission Hall mean that rooms are now well ventilated, brilliantly lighted with incandescent gas and have hot water heating apparatus. Two classrooms have been fitted up as a billiard room with a reading cum smoke room and a games room upstairs. The mission had begun at Frost's Passage and Kettle's Yard Night School where they had to tell the boys that soap was cheap and water was cheaper. The first site had proved unsuitable so the present site with a tiny grocer's shop at the corner and some back-to-back cottages had been bought. A tragic and dramatic occurrence took place at a funeral at Over. On the way to the church one of the bearers suddenly fell to the ground, dropping the corner of the coffin. Thinking he had only fainted the procession continued on the way to the church, one or two friends remaining behind to render what aid they could. However the man never regained consciousness and died within a few minutes. A platelayer on the Great Eastern Railway, he was always thought to be a strong man of perfect health. Bird Bros' chemical manure factory at Duxford was partially destroyed by fire which started in the bone mill. A cyclist messenger was despatched for the Whittlesford Fire Brigade, attached to Mr Maynard's works, which turned out very promptly. The building was formerly a brewery made of trellised woodwork which offered a ready start for the flames. The brigades stuck to the manuals hour

Swavesey tradesmen, who are compelled by law to close their shops on Thursday afternoon, are inquiring why traders from other places are allowed to hawk goods in the village at that time. Last week men with a large van belonging to a Cambridge tradesmen, who presumably had to close his shop on Thursdays, went from end to end selling oil, soap, candles, tin ware and other commodities, all of which Swavesey tradesmen supply. This is unjust. The County Council should fix one early-closing day for the whole county instead of leaving every parish to choose its own. 12 11 011

Sir – the Territorial cyclist has been used for the first time during the army manoeuvres. There is a battalion in Norfolk, Suffolk and Essex who would be distributed along the coast to repel any enemy landings or fight a delaying action until troops largely dependent upon the railway can arrive. Should there not be a cyclist battalion in Cambs who could proceed to any threatened place as reinforcements? Wootten said he'd started life as a small holder 55 years ago and it was nothing more or less than hard work from morning till night. 'Agricultural Amateurs' were always trying experiments to do away with hard work. But you could not succeed in farming unless you worked jolly hard. The liveliest scene occurred in King Street where the crowd were attracted by the sight of the hoarding outside the partly-demolished Hobson Street Chapel. There had been a great deal of friction and dispute over roads At present if permission was required to open a drain the matter had to go first to the Borough and then the County. Sir - The condition of one of the footbridge leading from Market Street to the path at Swavesey is giving cause for concern. The planks are rotten and spring dangerously though a support having broken away by reason of old age. The brook is now full of water and I tremble to think of what might happen if it gave way under the weight of a massive person – there are some in the village. The bridge is used every winter night by the parish lamp-lighter and we value this active official too highly to wish him to endanger his life in the public service, or even get a ducking. – Correspondent – 12 12 13h

When Mrs Pankhurst arrived for a Suffragette meeting at the Guildhall the streets were impassable, 20 policemen were on duty at the entrance and the air was filled with the horrible stench of stink-bombs.

Although the audience comprised a large opposition who created a good deal of uproar, the noise gradually diminished as her speech advanced and she was perfectly audible. Georgina Brackbenbury who took the chair had more interruption by the sound of a penny trumpet; its owner was a musician who produced notes mournful or joyous according to her words and achieved a flourishing Reveille. Afterwards crowds ringed a motor car waiting outside the Wheeler Street entrance, which had one of its tyres deflated. 1912 12 20
A conference on rural housing was told that were a number of corporate landowners doing their duty by providing cottages on their estates but others were not doing so well. There was not a single college which would not bring its property up to the proper standard if the difficulties were brought before them. The railway companies did not provide houses in anything like the same proportion as they introduced labour into the rural districts. Some village charities owned houses which were unsuitable for human habitation. But they could not afford to forego the rents and they could not borrow money for repairs. So they had to go on getting all they could for them. 12 12 20

Private enterprise could not cope with the rural housing problem, Miss Constance Cochrane warned. Cottages with three bedrooms could not be built for less than £150 and the rent labourers paid would not cover the cost. But Rural District Councils should not compete with private building. Many agricultural labourers could pay three shillings a week – it was just that they had got into the habit of thinking they could not afford it. If any landowner would give half-an-acre of land to their RDC to build cottages on then she would build an old-age cottage in her district. They were greatly needed as elderly often had to leave their homes as soon as their last day's work was done 12 12 20a

Robert Farren, the well-known Cambridge artist, died at Highgate. Farren, who was born in Cambridge about 80 years ago, lived in Cambridge all his life with the exception of a few years' residence at Scarborough until August last when he went to live in Highgate. He was a very clever water colour artist but best known for his work in oils and his etchings. His fen pictures were well-known and his series of etchings of cathedral cities amongst his most famous work. He also produced fine etchings of the Cambridge Greek plays. His 'Degree Day' was published as a photo by Wm Farren when he lived in Rose Crescent. Farren loved to paint Cambridge & Cambridgeshire scenery and there is scarcely a picturesque 'bit' in the town or county that has not been reproduced by him. At one time he had his studios at the top of which are now the University offices but were formerly a Liberal Club. A good many years ago he resided at Mayfield, Hills Road but during the last three years lived at no.1 Station Road. In his younger days he was a very handsome figure, tall and well-built. He was a skilful fencer and attained some note as a geologist. Me married Miss Mason, a Cambridge lady and had a family of 14 children, none of whom are now living in Cambridge, his only relatives being his nephew William Farren, the naturalist, of Regent Street and his brother. The first sugar-beet factory which was opened in October near Norwich might almost be called a philanthropic concern, so keen and unselfish has been the interest of certain gentlemen in his promotion. Everything seemed to conspire to give it a bad start: the weather was unfavourable, the erection of the factory was hindered by unprecedented floods and the inevitable postponement of the opening delayed the lifting of the crop which was done largely with Dutch labour imported for the occasion. Nevertheless a very satisfactory output of sugar has been made. It is hoped next year will prove favourable as the future of the industry in Britain may be said to depend upon it – 12 12 27

Railway collision. The members of the company who are appearing in pantomime at the New Theatre had a narrow escape whilst travelling from Wolverhampton to Cambridge. Whilst the theatrical special was at a standstill, a passenger train ran into it from behind, but fortunately no life was lost. Mr Milton Bode's Company, consisting of about 50 actors and actresses was, fortunately in the front of the train and beyond severe shocks, escaped without injury. Also travelling was the 'Wild Australia' Company including eight horses and a number of snakes and alligators. When the actors scrambled from the train they were mixed up with a giant python and an alligator that had escaped from their boxes 13 01 03b

Huntingdonshire magistrates were often simply country farmers whose hostility to the car had not been tempered by the teaching of the times, Max Pemberton alleges in a letter to 'The Field'. One of his friends who'd met 'one of these shallows' going home after the police court on a day when some £60 had 'been bagged' said the magistrate showed him the money taken and declared it was about to become a nest egg for the county. Yokels used to be hired week by week to go into the witness box and swear to the narrow escapes they had had. But nowadays it was sufficient for two constables to swear that a car was being driven dangerously to secure a conviction. 1913 01 03 p10 13 01 03a

A large outbuilding has been converted into a comfortable and spacious hall with seating for 250 and standing for 100 more. For three nights each week an excellent programme of first-class pictures will be shown. The opening performance was given on Boxing Day. The cinema apparatus, which is of the latest pattern, is contained in a fire-proof room at the rear of the hall

This has been one of the quietest and dullest Christmases ever known in Gt Gransden. It practically rained all the week. Two football matches were played on Christmas Day and Boxing Day against Everton and Sandy Reserves but the state of the ground made it more a matter of luck than play. The usual services were held in the parish church, which was nicely decorated. The carol singers paraded the village at midnight on Christmas Even and again on Christmas Day. Ely Pastor Married. A wedding of great local interest took place at the Wimpole Road Wesleyan Church, Colchester, on Boxing Day, when the Rev. J, Wesley Green, the esteemed pastor of the

Countess of Huntingdon Church, Ely, was married to Miss Helen Mary Mason, daughter of Mr. J. H. Mason, of Military Road, Colchester

Mr. Denison-Pender Takes the Field.-—Mr. J, C, Denison-Pender took an eleven to Ely on Saturday to play the Ely City F.C. He is a thorough sportsman and several journeyed to Paradise Recreation Ground especially to see him play. Many good performances on the football field stand to the credit of the prospective Conservative: candidate. Although he does not play very often now, he still possesses a fine knowledge of the game, and his every movement was watched with the greatest interest, he appeared at inside left, and occasionally put in some good work. He was fast and tricky, but was opposed to a couple of smart men in Goodin and Holland. The game was well-contested throughout, but at one period it looked as though the City would win by a most convincing margin. Play at the outset was all in their favour and at half-time Ely led by four goals to one. Half an hour of the second half went by without any addition to the score, but then the visitors put on a couple of goals, and were only beaten 4—3. The Rev. R. M. Nicholls (2), Holland and Brislin scored for Ely and Shore (2) and Shepherd for Mr. Denison-Pender's eleven.

The heavy and almost continuous rains are having a serious effect in Soham. The whole countryside is saturated and ditches full to overflowing. At Greenhills water is level with the cottagers' gardens and paths and roads are impassable, the outlook is extremely serious. A hundred acres are flooded due to the unsafe condition of the river bank which is in a state of collapse. Farmers fear grain will rot in the ground, some having bee covered with water since before Christmas. The roads are in shocking condition, the heavy farm traffic having cut them up to such an extent it is impossible to cycle over them

Where lodging houses had licences for the sale of intoxicating liquor it made enforcement of regulations difficult. John Mead, G.E.R. engine driver on the express from Norwich, said as he approached the crossing he saw a horse's head coming on the railway. Additional cottages should be erected in Stanley Road. In the first instance the council to decided to erect one block of twelve tenements, each having one single living room and a scullery. It would be advisable to erect two more blocks of six cottages each with two or more bedrooms. This kind of property was not built by private owners. Even though the cottages were not the very best that could be put up, it would be some small step towards providing a great need. 13 02 21 p7 CIP

The new scheme for the administration of charities at Bottisham & Lode was the subject of protest meetings of a very lively character. The Charities Commissioners did not know the local needs as well as the Trustees. One scheme provided apprenticeship for a poor boy who wanted something different from farming, others provided blankets and flour. Money from the Poor's Fen charity should continue to be distributed in the form of coal as many villagers were very poor and could not afford it. The

The Court heard that an agricultural labourer had been working for F.G. Coy at St John's Farm, Ely, when the steel hawser round the drum of the engine came off. Instead of putting it on with a crowbar, he used his hand, badly cutting it. He'd been awarded 9s a week under the Workmen's Compensation Fund. The hand had healed up and would get stronger with use. The farmer had offered him light work. But the man was in the Oddfellows and in receipt of sick pay for a year. If he took any work he would lose this. He was better off staying at home. The judge decided he could do some work and reduced his compensation payments to five shillings a week. 13 02 21 p11 CIP

St Luke's was a district lying between the Chesterton & Huntingdon roads, intersected by small streets in which were houses of working class persons. The Chamber of Agriculture dinner heard that Arthur Bull had discovered a document showing the agricultural condition of Cottenham before inclosure. The largest farmer had 59 acres in 139 separate pieces scattered all over the parish with no two plots joining. Three quarters of the parish was grass; a farmer sent his cows on to the common in the morning and could then amuse himself all day as long as he was ready to milk it in the evening. The cow did the rest. But it did not produce wool, so people had to keep a flock of sheep, most of which died of rot.

By the establishment of the University Farm Cambridge University had identified itself with the greatest industry without. It had a very large landed interest and a greater proportion of the land of Cambridgeshire than any single landlord. But Mr A. Gray, the Master of Jesus said few knew academics much about agriculture: undergraduates were examined in the Corn Exchange at the feet of the statue of Jonas Webb without having the remotest idea as to who he was.

Since the recent outbreaks of fire in Wicken a number of people, as an additional safeguard against the fatal spark, have adopted the principle of having the thatched roofs covered with galvanised iron sheets. A number of houses in the village have been treated in this manner including the cottage occupied by Mr David Fuller which, although on the opposite side of the road to the burning shop, took fire owing to ashes being carried by the wind on to the thatch. 13 04 11 p11 CIP
Many people will regret to learn of the misfortune that has befallen Mr Martin Frost who left Isleham for Australia several years ago. He settled about seven miles north of Melbourne and recently lost the whole of his household furniture and effects through fire. Green of Childerley Gate says that the old type of landowner have passed away and the estates bought by commercial men who have allowed many cottages to become dilapidated and untenantable. In this area clays and clunch were used to construct good substantial cottages thatched with straw or reed which are the envy of many town dwellers. But too often the Council do not trouble to see they are kept in good condition which is why many are uninhabitable. Men working for the state and county council are occupying cottages where the farm hands have been turned out, because they can afford to pay more rent. Sir – A visitor to the Mill Road Picture Palace of Varieties complained that a song with a refrain "But I'm not satisfied, and you're not satisfied" was very suggestive and the entertainment was too much of that class. Stacks on a farm at Kennett had been sold before the farmer was made bankrupt and should not be claimed by the Official Receiver, a court heard. It was a custom to allow sold sacks to remain on the farm until it suited the convenience of the purchaser to remove them. Stacks of barley and pea straw had been threshed but not sainfoin or clover. But a farmer scarcely ever sold corn unthreshed in the stack because nobody would tell the exact quantity or quality and one was bound to make a bad bargain. Various estate agents said they had never heard of such a 'custom' but F.F. Doggett, a farmer from Cherry Hinton said it had existed locally for the last 30 years 13 05 02 p9 CIP

Heber Martin, surveyor of Littleport said he'd measured the barges and worked out the amount supplied. Joseph Whitehead said he'd carted it from the lighters. But the Board disputed the quantity. The suggestion that being fenland it had acted as a quick-sand and swallowed up the materials could not be accepted since the ground was so hard people could not get a pick into it. Suffragettes attempted to blow up a railway crossing gate at Granhams Road, Shelford. The gatekeeper found a treacle tin with a bootlace through the lid connecting with a long red squib inside. It was surrounded by cotton wool soaked in oil and lumps of charcoal. On the outside was written 'Votes for Women'. There is little doubt it was a genuine article that could have set fire to the gate had the lighted lace not gone out. It was immersed in a bucket of water. Rumours said that two strange women had been seen near the site 13 05 30 p11 CIP # c.26.2 # c.33

A blaze broke out at Messrs Macintosh's foundry in Thompson's Lane. After the days work is done the men draw the furnace to allow the fire to die out. When this is done huge sparks fly up, giving the impression that the place is on fire. But one of these sparks was blown on to the roof and set light to a beam. Had it been left the entire premises would have burnt down. But firemen, aided by undergraduates, put it out. 13 05 30 p11 CIP # c.34.75 # c.27

Swavesey fire fund *
Sir – considerable dissatisfaction has been expressed that the distribution of wearing apparel collected by the Swavesey Fire Relief Fund, was not carried out in a fair and just manner. Clothes which were given for distribution amongst the sufferers were sold at a rummage sale, held before the men had returned from the fields, at ridiculous prices. A lady's costume in perfectly good condition was sold for half-a-crown and coats and jackets for a shilling or sixpence. Cash is more easily distributed than clothes but would not a costume worth at the very least 15 shillings be of more value to a woman who wanted clothes than the half-crown it realised. – A Subscriber. 'If you want to spend a gay week, Come to Cambridge for the May Week, And we'll promise lots of merriment and fun'. Cambridge May Week is now in full swing. We have long ceased to wonder at the anomaly of a May Week which comes in June and lasts a fortnight. According to the 'Onlooker' it was in the year 1882 that the May Races, around which all the festivities have grown up, changed their date from May to June. But custom dies had and people would be horrified if anyone were so bold as to suggest an alteration now 13 06 06 p7 CIP # c.36.97

St Matthew's Church, Littleport was built in 1878 to accommodate some 250 persons, but on Sunday the seats were nearly all empty. The congregation numbered 17 in all with only two grown-ups, Miss Gilbert who plays the harmonium and a young man, the remainder being children. The bell was rung by one of the children, the parishioner who usually undertook that duty having stayed away. The vicar's churchwarden was also conspicuous by his absence and the choir seats were empty. Considerable sensation has been occasioned at Cottenham by the story of a servant girl being attacked, gagged and bound in broad daylight in her master's house, by a strange man who stole a purse and decamped without leaving a trace behind him. The attack took place at the residence of Ephraim Gautrey, a well-known farmer and seed-grower. She had gone to her master's bedroom with two pairs of boots when a man threw something over her head and tied her to the bedpost with a pair of Mr Gautrey's pants. He then ransacked every drawer. The job was an active one, involving a lot of running up and down staircases and he had been advised not to over-exert himself. A few weeks ago he'd attempted to stop a runaway horse drawing a trap containing several children in Trumpington Street and the exertion probably hastened his death. 13 06 20 p8 CIP # c.44.5

Mrs Clark had raked out ashes from the fire but the flames ran up the boarding into the thatch with extraordinary rapidity. The village feast at Brampton has been marred by a shocking tragedy, a labourer named Frederick Seekings having, it is alleged, murdered a woman who passed as his wife, on the way home. Two men noticed something on the grass at the side of the road. It was Mrs Seekings, dead with a terrible wound in her throat. The man lay on the grass beside her. Both were under the influence of drink. The pair were not married, the woman really being the wife of a man at Kettering 13 08 01 CIPof

A white-haired 86-year-old old lady came before Linton Guardian to lay a grievance. The Master said she had been insubordinate, had conveyed messages between and old man and an imbecile woman. She had had her tea and sugar stopped and been prevented from going into the fields. The woman said she's broken the rules in complete ignorance. She'd accepted some apples over the hedge and for that her tea and sugar were stopped. Although 86 she was active and wanted to get in the fields. Guardians must support the Master but they would allow the tea and sugar now she'd apologised. 13 08 08 p3 CIP

July and August used to be the quietest months of the year in Cambridge. But now they are regarded as months for conferences and hotels, lodging houses and tradesmen are reaping the benefit. Last week it was the Institution of Mechanical Engineers for their summer meeting, now the British Dental Association. Those who arrange the programmes always combine business with pleasure in a delightful way and invariable one of the first items is a Reception on behalf of the Town and University. Three fine fireplaces had been given to the Corporation by Mr Bishop to be built into the new addition to the Guildhall and Library. Although they could find a suitable place for one, they could not find space for two more. They had agreed to lend one fireplace to the new Archaeological Museum for six months but that was no use to the Museum: they wanted to incorporate it into their building. But the Council had few such valuable things and it was hard to part with them. They would be asked for one of the maces next. It was the dying wish of a Lode nonconformist that he be buried in a vacant spot adjacent to his mother and that the service was conducted by a minister of his own denomination. Ely R.D.C. heard that a cottage on the Mildenhall Road, Littleport was thatched with rotten straw and the rain came through the roof. The sides of the building were boarded and in a bad state. It was also overcrowded. There was a large manure heap placed near a drain, the water in which was used for drinking purposes. At Lt Downham the rent of cottages with a fair amount of garden, suitable for the working classes, was too high for those engaged in agricultural pursuits. It was impossible to build a six-roomed house to let for only £7. But cottages could be built cheaper on waste land. 13 08 15 p11 CIP

Following the destruction by fire of the Burwell Lode pumping engine at Upware in January the old engine was overhauled. It was restarted after six weeks and the pump kept going meanwhile by two heavy traction engines. But it was not quite strong enough to work the huge pump and in times of heavier floods difficulty had been experienced in coping with the water. Now a new one made by Ruston and Proctor of Lincoln has been delivered to Upware by road. Considerable difficulty was met with installing it as the station has not yet been rebuilt from the fire. The engine is much smaller so the walls have been lowered and a temporary roof erected. Swavesey Bethel Baptist Chapel reopened after an extensive and costly restoration. The building, erected in 1868, has of late years shown signs of serious decay. A few years ago extensive repairs were carried out on the flooring which was badly affected with dry rot. But this was unavailing and the chapel was found to be in a dangerous condition as regards both walls and floors. The whole had to be removed and replaced which cost a great deal of money. Now concrete foundations have been put in, the floor relaid and windows filled with tinted leaded lights. A new boiler and seats have also been installed. Big public baths were really a luxury but the council should spend money on cottage baths in the poorer quarters of Cambridge. They were necessities for those who had not opportunities in their own private houses to wash themselves. In Germany schools were built with baths and the children were required to bathe once a week. In backward Russia there was the village bath for everyone. Bradford had seven different types. Future of aeroplanes – their part in war, lecture by Hiram Maxim, inventor of Maxim guns, to University Engineering Society.
Sir Hiram Maxim lectured to the University Engineering Society on "Early experiments with steam-driven aeroplanes." The lecture was illustrated with lantern slides.
Sir Hiram said that in the winter of 1856-7, when he was 16 years of age, his father worked out a plan of a flying machine. It consisted of a small platform which he proposed to lift directly into the air by the action of two screw propellers, revolving in reverse directions. For a motor he proposed to employ some kind of explosive material, gunpowder preferred. If such an apparatus could be successfully navigated through the air, it would be such inestimable value as a military engine that no matter how much it might cost to run it, it would used by Governments, even if the engines had be driven by explosive as costly as pulminate of mercury. year or two later the well-known Peter Cooper, of New York, actually commenced a series of experiments with a view to constructing a machine to lift itself directly into the air by means of screw propellers on vertical shafts. He proposed to drive his screws by means of engines utilising the explosive force of chloride of nitrogen. He had not got very far with his experiments when a premature explosion injured the sight of one of his eyes, and he seemed to have abandoned the whole thing. He believed that almost everyone, when they commenced to study the question of aerial navigation by means machines heavier than the air, first thought of lifting the machines directly into the air, either by the agency of wings, or of screw propellers working vertical shafts. He remembered some 40 years ago, when he commenced to think of the subject, that was his first idea, and he actually commenced drawings, and made calculations for a machine this plan, using an oil motor something like Brayton engine for his motive power. However, he was quite unable work out any system which would not be too heavy to lift itself directly into the air, and it was only when he commenced to study the aeroplane system that it became apparent to him that it would be possible make a machine light enough and powerful enough to raise itself without the agency of a balloon. From the very first he was convinced that it would be quite out the question to employ a balloon in any form, for he found that if it were large enough to be any practical value lifting a machine, it would large enough prevent its progress through the air. "A flying machine," said Sir Hiram, "to be any value must of necessity be able to propel itself through the air at a velocity greater than that of an ordinary high wind. It ought at least to able travel at a velocity of 35 miles hour. At this speed I discovered that a small and cheap aeroplane would lift more for its weight than a balloon, and would require vastly less to propel it. Therefore, in an actual flying machine, the balloon appeared to me not only useless, but impossible". If large machines could be made with sufficient power to lift themselves vertically into the air, experimenting with them would be comparatively simple, because no large field would be required. But with the aeroplane system, in which the machine might be considered as a kite, or perhaps a system of kites which must rise at an angle, it was necessary it should have long run order to attain the required velocity. At the time these calculations were made the light, high speed petrol motor had no existence. The only power then available being the steam engine, he made all his calculations with a view to using steam as his motive power. "While I was deeply studying the question of the possibility making flying machine that would actually fly," continued Sir Hiram, "I became convinced that there was but one system to work on, and that was the aeroplane system. While this subject was my mind I met with accident in Spain and was confined to my room the hotel for about two weeks, and to amuse myself I made many calculations and found that an aeroplane machine driven by a steam engine ought to lift itself into the air.

"I had had considerable experience the States in making small and light steam engines, but nothing practical was done until sometime later, when one day I was approached by three gentlemen who asked me if it would be possible for me to build a flying machine —how long would it take and how much would it cost? My reply was: would take five years and it would cost £50.000. The first three years would devoted to developing a light internal combustion engine and the remaining two years to making a flying machine". Later on a considerable amount of money was placed his disposal and experiments commenced. He obtained possession of large mansion near Dartford Heath with about 40 acres land, and put up a large building for constructing the machine. Although he had thought much of the internal combustion engine, it seemed to him that it would take too long to develop one, so he decided that his first experiments, at least, would use a steam engine. He therefore designed and made a steam engine and boiler which developed more energy for its weight than any other heat engine ever made. Unfortunately, there were many large trees the park, which he would not cut down; this made it unsafe to run the machine except on a railway track so he had to vacate. The question has often been asked "what use can flying machines be put to?" The reply is very simple. They will at first all be used for military purposes, and also to a much less degree for sporting purposes. They may also be used, to some small extent, to carry the mails, but as to carrying passengers and freight a paying basis, that altogether out the question. They can never compete with the railways. The value of flying machines in warfare is so great as to beyond computation. One Dreadnought costs over one million pounds, and for this sum, 500 large and powerful aeroplanes could be made. Suppose now that we should be at war with a continental nation on or near the British Channel. Each of the enemy's machines would be able to visit London and return twice in the darkness of one night, each time bringing and dropping half a ton of nitre-glycerine. How would London look after a week this kind of treatment? There only one way to protect ourselves against attacks by aeroplanes, and that is by other aeroplanes. The aeroplane must necessarily mark the beginning of a new epoch in the relations of civilised nations with each other. Kings and Emperors will not be disposed to war with their neighbours if they know that their own capital may be attacked and destroyed in a few hours after the declaration of war. The aeroplane will therefore do much to stop war altogether between the highly civilised nations the world, a thing very much desired. – 13 10 24

The Isolation Hospital should have a discharging hut. The hut provided two compartments. The patient to be discharged was taken into one, stripped and bathed, the clothes were taken away and disinfected, then taken to the second compartment where the patient dressed. This was one way of avoiding the carrying back of disease to the villages and was absolutely essential. Longstanton residents complained about their water. Isle of Ely County Council – smallholdings report including Downham, Haddenham, Littleport, Stretham, Police cottage at Wilburton
It would be a disastrous thing if the buildings on the Militia Barracks on the north side of Silver Street, Ely, which cost £10,000 to build, were sold to individual citizens at scrap price.. No one knew what the future was going to be: they may be needed again for military occupation. The barracks were in perfectly safe hands – Ely Urban Council. But this sale related to the hospital and cottages on the north side and had nothing to do with them, councillors heard. 13 11 21 p9 CIP

The Fire escape and engine responded to the alarm of a blaze at St John's College where they found a bonfire burning in second court to celebrate the victory of a rower in the Colquhoun Sculls. Fireworks were discharged and a crowd gathered to watch the glare through the chapel windows. Later a fire broke out in a wicker chair in an undergraduate's room. It is thought a spark from the bonfire may have blown through the window, or a lighted cigarette dropped in the chair. 13 11 21 p11 CIP # c.44.5 # c.34.75 # c.39 # c.38 : rowing

He remembered when his sisters were drilled at their French grammar like so many soldiers and there was 'thimble pie' in reserve. Education nowadays was very much less formal and more happy. Two things he was pleased to see at Miss Keen's school were Swedish drill and swimming. The girls should educate themselves, train their hands in embroidery and sewing and learn to darn their own socks. They should keep their tempers and be kind to everyone. Ely ratepayers oppose plans by the Ely Gas and Light Company to be allowed to produce electricity. This would grant them a monopoly so far as lighting is concerned. The price of gas is already very high – more through the slot meters used in the homes of the working classes. In other towns where there is competition prices are lower. They had seen the evil of one company having a monopoly. The company directors did not want competition. Should the Council undertook to supply electricity. Mr Harlock had installed electricity privately and was now paying almost half what he had before. It

The existing horse tram service was absolutely obsolete and should be wound up, councillors were told. Under the Cambridge Tramways Act of 1879 the Corporation had laid out the roads with the tracks and expected to recover £325 a year from the Company. But they now had no money to pay and no balance in hand. The cost of taking up the rails and making good the road would not be less than £2,550. (Sensation). From this was to be deducted about £750, the value of the rails. Addenbrooke's Finances. In the exhaustive report of Addenbrooke's Hospital Committee for 1913 appear statements which are both gratifying and otherwise. Gratifying on account of the insight once again given to the vast amount of work done mainly amongst the poorer members of the community in the alleviation of suffering and pain. Year after year one learns that this Institution of the ever open door is extending its multifarious duties in all directions. One cannot therefore but read with feelings akin to dismay that public support has not kept pace with the increasing efforts of those upon whose shoulders the management of this invaluable institution revolves. One gleans from this latest report that financial support from the general public during the past 12 months has decreased by no less a sum than £1,000. The significance of this is scarcely realisable by the full statement of facts and figures and this decrease is all the more regrettable when it is pointed out that church collections alone fell by about £500. This disquieting feature of hospital finances comes at a time when the committee has on hand one of the most formid¬able tasks ever undertaken in the large and expensive building extension scheme, which comes out at a total cost of £25,000. The portion of the work which is now being carried out will absorb the £18,000 already subscribed and on top of this a further £7,000 is necessary before the contract can be further carried along. Even then, a sum bordering on £2.000 will be required for interior furnishing. It is plainly evident that the Hospital Committee in the im¬mediate future has on hand a task which cannot have been surpassed by previous managements.

A shocking fatality occurred in the early hours of Christmas morning on the road between Great Wilbraham and Fulbourn. A driver for the Provincial Motor Cab Company overturned the taxicab he was driving and was pinned underneath in his seat, sustaining fatal injuries to his head. The accident occurred about one o'clock in the morning and he lay in the road until found by the Wilbraham mail driver at 6.40. The car was badly knocked about. A slight outbreak of fire occurred at a fried fish shop in Kingston Street. The shop is occupied by Mr John Brookes, who has just taken it over, and this was only the second time of his using the frying stoves. His daughter on opening the furnace door found that the fat pan had been burning through and the fat was running on the floor. The flames belched forth in a volume and ignited a pan of fish near by, and also burned the fish in the pan above the stove. Edward Matthews, a Corporation employee, secured a barrow of sand and this was used with great effect and the outbreak was soon overcome 14 01 02e

Swavesey Parish Council, who got into trouble over the stack fire in August through their desire to save the rates at the expense of the workers, seem to be pursuing a similar policy. Meanwhile the new fire hose, hydrant etc have been received from the manufacturer and inquiries are being made as t when members of the new Fire Brigade will be instructed in their use. Great annoyance is being caused to Lode Cricket Club by some person doing wilful damage to the village cricket pitch by making a path across the centre. The club posted notices in the village in the spring of last year which put a stop to it until the cricket season was over, when it was renewed to such an extent that the pitch is now almost as bare as a public path. The club will prosecute if notices do no good 14 01 09h

Swavesey church to issue appeal for urgent repairs 14 01 09i

About four weeks ago the Norwich Union Fire Insurance Office sent a cheque to Swavesey Parish Council for payment of workers at a stack fire in Market Street early in October. Still none of them have been paid and no explanation for the delay issued. The small sum would have been useful during the Christmas season. The Councillors' inaction seems inexplicable coming as it does after the trouble caused by their attempt to retain for other purposes more than half the money granted by the Liverpool, London and Globe Fire Office for remuneration of helpers at a stack fire in August. Has the Parish Council retired? 14 01 09i

Healthy Cambridge. — A contributor writes: I notice from the Registrar-General's returns that Cambridge last week had the lowest death rate in England. This is a matter of great congratulation and it is especially gratifying when one remembers that this has been the case twice during the past two months. Last week's death rate for Cambridge was 5.5 per thousand. 14 01 09 CIP

New Vicar Appointed.—The living of Ickleton has been offered by the Lord Chancellor to the Rev. Philip Henry Cooke, who has accepted the preferment. Mr. Cooke is curate of St. Matthew's, Upper Clapton. He took his B.A. degree at London University in 1881, and was ordained in 1889, and has held curacies in the East End of London. The present Vicar, the Rev. F. J. Tackley, enters on his new duties at Greenwich in February. 14 01 09 CIP

Church Windows,— Some old stained glass, which was taken out of the Church (at Bourn) 43 years ago at the Restoration, has been replaced in the Lancet Window on the South aide of the tower. The glass is valuable and is probably between 300 and 400 years old. It has made a very pretty little window, and the work of putting it in has been extremely well done. 14 01 09 CIP

Tramway Company's Stern Struggle.—When the Cambridge horse trams cease to run (writes Free Lance) not a few of the town and county will lament the closing down of a Company which has for over 20 years struggled hard against overpowering opposition to maintain a service of conveyance for the general public along some of the main thoroughfares of the Borough. None will deny that the horse-drawn tram today is as out-of-date as it is rare, but it is well to recollect that at the time of their introduction (and for many years subsequently) into Cambridge, they were hailed as a "boon and a blessing" by all classes. Despite keen competition - they have seen the decease of three horse bus companies and one motor bus company - the Transport Co. have managed to survive until now and a perusal of a brief sketch of its history will show that those who have borne the burden of management for 34 years have carried out their by no means easy task with commendable consideration for the interests of the shareholders and the convenience of the general public. 14 01 09 CIP

Death of Mr. John Woolhouse. —The death occurred on Wednesday week at The Lodge. Clayhithe, of Mr. John Woolhouse. Deceased, whose age was 66, was well-known in Cambridge and district. He was born at Wellingmore, near Lincoln, where his father was a large landowner, and came into the district about 29 years ago, and occupied Honey Hill Farm, Manea. For many years prior to going to March, where he resided from 1890 to 1906. Mr. Woolhouse was known throughout the county as a seed merchant and acted as representative for a Sleaford firm. Three thatched, stud and plaster cottages in Middle Watch, Swavesey, were destroyed by fire on Friday night. One had been recently faced with brick and rethatched – the thatchers had not quite completed their work. The other two were part of the Docksey estate. The alarm was quickly given and the parish fire engine arrived about 40 minutes later. It was got to work soon afterwards but was not manned by the usual force of men, the team including several lads and boys. The men who usually work the engine were unwilling to do so as they have not been paid by the Parish Council for previous fires. 14 01 16

Sir – I wish to correct some reports referring to the fire in Middle Watch, Swavesey. I was at the engine house where men were so eager to get to the scene of the fire they wanted to leave before all the hose could be packed and pulled the engine along themselves, declining the use of a horse thinking it would waste time to harness it. The engine was kept working for an hour without a stop which proves they were sufficiently strong and capable for the work. And no Parish Councillor warned your reporter not to publish any more 'sneering remarks over this fire'; if the full conversation had been published it would have altered the sense altogether – E. There has been an eternal struggle in the fens between drainage and navigation: the Highlander wants to get his flood water off rapidly and by so doing floods the Lowlander out. The navigator wants deep channels and in making them withdraws the natural support for the banks which slip and silt up his deeper water again. Parish awards make elaborate provision for maintaining ditches but the County Council has no powers to maintain natural rivers free from obstruction and the issue of underground water rights is difficult. Now an inquiry called after the disastrous flood of August 1912 has started taking evidence from various bodies. 14 01 16c, d & I # c.29

Territorial recruiting week has seen the Cambridgeshire Regiment up to full strength proving patriotic feeling remains strong and true. The wave of enthusiasm is spreading with recruits coming forward in gratifying numbers in Ely, March and Soham, proving Fenmen are determined not to be outdone in sturdy patriotism by the men of Cambridge. Too Old. The ladies have thrown themselves into the Recruiting Week effort with much enthusiasm and their work has been pleasing feature. A rather food story is told of a lady who called at various houses in Cambridge, and asked several wives whether their husbands were Territorials. The lady in question asked one comely young wife if her husband was at home, and received a negative answer. She was also informed that the husband was not a Territorial, and the wife expressed her doubts as to whether he would join the citizen army. The lady canvasser noted the number of the house and promised to call on the husband, despite the fact that the housewife continued to express grave doubts as to whether her husband would enlist. On the occasion of the next visit to the house, the wife's dubious views were realised - he man of the house was an old age pensioner! 14 01 16 CIP

Mr. Hamer Towgood,—During the week, agriculture has sustained a severe loss by the death of Mr. Hamer Twogood of Sanfoins. Little Shelford, and the tidings of the demise of this prominent breeder of shire horses will be received with general regret in the agricultural counties of England. A son of Mr. Edward Towgood, of Paxton Hall, St. Neots, the deceased gentleman took up residence at Santfoins about 50 years ago. On the death of his father, he inherited a considerable interest in the Sawston paper mills, and for a long period he controlled this business. Agriculture, however, made a strong appeal to him, and he devoted; much of his time to the study of shire horses, and to the breeding of first-class animals. As judge, prize donor or exhibitor, Mr. Hamer Towgood was known to agricultural societies throughout the country, and the Cambs. and Isle of Ely Agricultural Society, of which he was a Vice-President and a generous supporter, has lost a great friend by reason of his death. The deceased gentleman was one of the original members of the Cambridgeshire County Council, representing the Sawston electoral division until his resignation in 1900. He was 71. 14 01 16 CIP

Another Fire at Swavesey.—A portion of the village of Swavesey was involved in a fire on Friday night, when three cottages in Middle Watch were destroyed and 16 persons were rendered homeless. But for the fact that the wind was light and was blowing the sparks and flames away from other property, the village must have suffered more seriously from the effects of the blaze. The district cannot be described as a congested area, but flying sparks are at times a menace to surrounding property, particularly in a neighbourhood where many of the cottages are thatched, and are composed largely of stud and plaster. But the greatest menace to Swavesey's safety on Friday was the fact that the men of the village, considering that they had a grievance with the Parish Council in respect to the non-payment to them of money received from fire insurance companies in acknowledgement of services rendered by local men at a previous fire, refused to assist with the pumping of the manual engine 14 01 16 CIP

Tom Hayward's Marriage.—Mr.Tom Hayward, of Cambridge, the Surrey cricketer, was on Tuesday married at the Registrar's Office, Wandsworth, to Miss Matilda Emma Mitchell, daughter of Mr. Sydney Edward Mitchell, of Putney. Elaborate preparations had been made to keep the wedding a secret, and only about half a dozen people, including a Press photographer, saw Mr, and Mrs. Hayward leave the register office. Mrs. Hayward told a Pressman that she had known "Tom" for 18 years, but that they had lost sight of one another for a long time. In 1911 it was by chance that they met again, and she agreed to marry him. "The bride is one of the most famous women detectives," says the "Daily Mail." At times dressed as a man, looking and acting the part, as actors say, she did work for the South-Western Railway Company, and then entered the service of the Royal College of Veterinary Surgeons, riding about the country on horses to detect unlicensed "vets." Afterwards she became head of the secret service staff at Selfridge's. "Divorce has really been my speciality in the past," said Mrs. Hayward, smiling, "but I have finished with it now. Tom and I go to Paris tomorrow, and we are going to be very happy." After next season Tom will retire from cricket – Mrs Hayward says so. And it is for this reason it is to be feared that the oft-deferred farewell will at last be made, to the regret of cricketing England. 14 01 23 CIP

"Scotched," — The Cambridge Ratepayers' Association (writes Free Lance) are patting themselves on the back, and proclaiming that they have been the means of "scotching" the Borough Council's scheme for the enlargement of the Guildhall. If the deferment of the proposal is not entirely due to the big opposition put forth by this organisation, at any rate the members are justly entitled to take a good deal of the credit for it, the number of signatures obtained for their monster petition being a plain indication that the great majority of the ratepayers were against such a costly proceeding. Whilst I have on several occasions expressed my opposition to such an extensive scheme, one cannot but realise the need which exists for better Public Library accommodation, and it is to be hoped the dropping of the larger scheme will not prevent the work of extending and improving the Library being carried through. # c.35.7 14 01 23 CIP

A poor woman had to come in and clean up after the meeting without any reward or fee. She had also bought oil, because they, poor distressed people, could not provide for themselves. She was paid for cleaning the school for the children and should be paid a shilling out of the parish fund for extra meeting. The coals they used belonged to the Education Committee. At the opening of the new County Hall in Hobson Street the chairman thanked the Town Council for allowing them to use their council chamber and committee rooms for the past 25 years. In 1747 the old Shire Hall had been built on Market Hill above arches where butchers had their stalls on market days. In 1842 this passed to the town when a new Shire Hall at Castle Hill was ready for occupation. But the enormous development of administrative business had now brought the County Council again into the centre to this new commodious and economical building, finally bringing together departments previously distributed in all parts of the town. 14 02 06, a-c # c.35.1 # c.35.7

For many years a parish room has been a requirement of the village, but the Vicar and his committee did not feel justified in going to the expense of considerably over £300 without having a prospect of being able to pay for the work. Collections have been made from time to time on behalf of the Hall Fund, however, and as a result of generous donation and social events the money was raised with the exception of about £20. This sum is chiefly on account of the heating apparatus and was placed in the original scheme after the work had been commenced by Mr. F. Mills, the architect and builder. The laying of the foundation stone of the new Primitive Methodist Church in Castle Street was well attended in spite of the unpleasant weather. The site was gaily decorated with flags and a platform erected for those taking part in the ceremony. The layers of stones were presented with small silver trowels as mementoes of the event and those who wished were invited to purchase the privilege of laying a brick. Hundon parish church was gutted by fire on Sunday evening and nothing now remains but the walls and the tower. The building had been closed after evensong that afternoon but just before eight Mr Jolley noticed a glare near the organ. Being unable to enter he hurried for assistance but within fifteen minutes the church was ablaze from end to end. Soon there was a great crash of falling masonry as the roof collapsed. As the fire reached the woodwork in the belfry the bells fell to the ground with resounding crashes and now lie in an indescribable heap. A new organ and clock were destroyed but fortunately the parish registers and the pulpit were saved. 14 02 20f

About 500 working men attended a parish meeting at Cottenham to discuss allotments. They hoped to acquire Christ College Farm as the college was willing to help the working people. Preference would be given to the young: it was them they wanted to get in the villages and if they were given a piece of land, they would stop at home. If the farm were let out it would maintain three times the people it currently did. It would bring more people back on the land than any other way 14 02 20g

Racing at Cottenham.—The Cambridge University Steeplechases were held at Cottenham yesterday before a large attendance. A capital day's sport was much enjoyed, and the weather conditions during the greater part of the afternoon were all that could be desired. Shortly before the end of the programme, however, a drizzling rain commenced to fall. There were no serious accidents, but the open ditch brought many of the riders to grief. The going was heavy over some parts of the steeplechase course. 1914 02 20 CIPof

"Brawling" in Church. Interruptions in Divine Service were made at Holy Trinity Church, St. Matthew's Church and the Friends' Meeting House by militant suffragettes who chanted the prayer: "O Lord, our God, strengthen and comfort those women who are suffering in prison for conscience sake. Rouse Thy Church. O God, to protest against this evil." I can imagine nothing which is more likely to alienate sympathy than this recurrent brawling in church. Militant methods of madness have already put a brake on the advancement of an excellent movement, and my sympathy is with those ladies whose constitutional methods and forcible arguments are suffering as the result of window smashing, arson, church brawling and similar idiotic tactics. Thereare those who hold that militancy was justified in order to open the eyes of the country to the cause of the voteless woman but that time is long since past. Public opinion in the country needs education on the subject of the women's suffrage question, and the man in the street now requires argument. Spoliation of property and the disturbance of church worshippers is no argument in favour of votes for women # c.83 # c.33 1914 02 20 CIPof

The number of people coming forward to train as teachers was dropping and soon the supply of competent staff would be insufficient to meet the demand. The salaries in Cambridgeshire are the worst in East Anglia. It is a blind-alley occupation where people find their progress barred and their careers as wage-earners almost irretrievably ruined. Teachers would never get adequate salaries if left to the tender mercies of the local education authorities and the N.U.T. should take concerted action, a meeting was told 14 02 27a

Croxton parish meeting to discuss housing was well attended. At first there was evidence they would like to have cottages. But when it came to the cost and the rent to be charged the feeling of the meeting changed, for men did not like the idea of paying extra. If cottages were built at three shillings a week they would be occupied by the better-off people. They would be jeered at for living in cottages which the poorer-people were paying for 14 02 27b

Cup Victory.—Histon footballers attained one of the goals of their ambition on Saturday last, when, for the first time in its history, the Cambs. Junior Cup found its way to Histon. The village was almost deserted on Saturday afternoon, practically the whole population having gone to see the 'Stutes win the Cup, which they did by defeating St. Matthew's by the odd goal in three. Great excitement prevailed in the village on Saturday evening, and the players, who journeyed home by the seven o'clock train, were given an enthusiastic reception. The cup was taken in the midst of a cheering throng to the headquarters of the club, stops being made on the way at the residences of vice-presidents where short speeches were given. During the evening a number of supporters of the club, in which the juvenile element was very prominent, procured some oil, and a bonfire was lit on the green to celebrate the event. Now it is all over and the Cup rests quietly in the Institute, everyone is looking forward to the semi-final and final of the Chatteris Cup, which, it is hoped, will remain in Histon. 1914 02 27 CIPof

The Grazing on the Green. Great excitement has been caused in the village of Barrington through the Council endeavouring - as the villagers consider - to take away the right of grazing horse and cattle on the Green. It was thought that a certain resident was responsible for this, and a trench was dug in front of his house by some of the villagers, and an effigy was placed on the Green, together with a notice, with a Union Jack flying over the same, urging the villagers to stand up for their rights. The whole village was in an uproar. This culminated in a discussion, after the ordinary meeting of the councillors, held in the Barrington Schoolroom on Tuesday evening last, when there was a very large gathering. At first there was some little disturbance caused by one of the villagers, but fortunately, under the influence of the able chairmanship of Mr. Rate, this was quelled. Later Capt Fanshawe explained the scheme as formulated by the councillors, but he emphatically informed the gathering — and this was borne, out by the minutes of the previous meeting — that he had been, and still was, averse to the new scheme, inasmuch as he did not consider it would be to the advantage of the villagers of Barrington. Up to the present, the villagers have grazed their cattle, etc., upon the Green without any payment, but the councillors, excluding Captain Fanshawe, have, now applied for authority to make certain charges, which, as previously mentioned, has been greatly resented. At the end of the meeting one of the villagers asked that the matter should not be allowed to rest, and it was suggested that a further meeting, should be called at an early date to discuss the matter more fully 1914 03 27 CIPof

New Borough Rates "Postponed" - :'Free Lance" writes: There is something approaching consterna-tion amongst Cambridge, ratepay¬ers at the staggering intelligence that the rates of the Borough are likely to be increased by several pence in the £. No wonder there was strong opposition to such a substantial rise and although towards the end of the debate Councillor Raynes offered to accept a reduction of £1,000, the Council decided to defer further consideration of the matter for a fortnight, in order that the various committees may have the opportunity of going through their estimates and cur¬tailing, wherever possible, their expenditure for the coming year. 1914 03 27 CIPof

Mr. G. P. Sennitt.—The sad news of the death of Mr, George Perry Sennitt, which was announced to neighbours and friends over a wide area during the weekend, has been received with the deepest regret. It is about eight weeks since Mr. Sennitt's health necessitated confinement to his room, and since then his constitution has gradually yielded. Death ensued at 2.30 a.m. on Saturday, and it cast a gloom over the village of Stretham, with which the deceased gentleman has had a life-long association. As farmer and friend the villagers had learned to love and revere George Sennitt, and the loss to the village, occasioned by his death, will be keenly felt. He was a recognised authority on poultry, butter and eggs, and for many years officiated as judge in this section of the county shows. He was a regular worshipper at the little Baptist Chapel of the village. He inherited the strict Nonconformist principles of his family. 1914 03 27 CIPof

County Borough Bill Rejected. — So after all (writes Free Lance) Cambridge is not to be a County Borough. At least, that was the verdict of the House of Commons last night when the Bill came up for its third and final reading. News of the majority of 54 against will, of course, be read with great jubilation on the part of those in the County, who led in so judicious and able a manner by Sir George Fordham, have left no stone unturned to see that what they regarded as nothing more or less than a ruinous proposition so far as the rural districts were concerned should not become an Order of Parliament. On the other hand, disappointment deep and grave will be felt by those in the Borough, who for years past, have cherished the idea and have looked forward with no small amount of pride to the day when Cambridge would be able to boast of what they considered to be its due and proper dignity, namely, of being a County Borough. It was with this view that the great amalgamation scheme was brought forward and carried through al¬most innumerable difficulties and one cannot but commiserate with those who have been so earnest in their endeavours in this respect, at the turn the final event has taken. # c.35.7 # c.35.1 - 1914 03 27 CIPof

Sometimes rabbits, fowls and pigs were kept in them and it would be better to demolish them. Some advocated grouping houses in quadrangles but this meant they would be overlooked and neighbours would come into collision. The upkeep would be a source of discomfort, especially if neighbours were not on the best of terms.

Fen Ditton has a number of charities. One is a sort of Tom Tiddler's ground where a parishioner can get one shilling and threepence by coming and asking for it. This is open to abuse by people earning good money who 'had the cheek' to apply for the dole. But this method of distribution has proved the most satisfactory of any yet hit upon. Last year 107 had applied including some who earned 50 shillings a week. 14 04 03

The fire at Lt Chesterford practically repast the disaster that occurred at Swavesey last year. In these days of slated and tiled roofs, fires of this magnitude are comparatively rare but in the ‘good of days’ it was not uncommon for a dozen cottages to be destroyed in a single outbreak. Villages like Chesterford have been largely left alone by the modern builder and are still open to the danger of annihilation. Only on Monday a public house and two cottages were burned down at Newport. Soon perhaps the thatched cottages will have disappeared altogether save for isolated specimens regarded as curiosities. 14 04 10c

A most disastrous fire broke out at Little Chesterford: eleven houses have been gutted and ten families, numbering 43 persons, are rendered homeless. It started at a stack at Bordeaux Farm then wind carried large pieces of burning straw on to the roofs of three thatched cottages which were razed to the ground. Other balls of fire fell on roofs of houses up the street and those which were thatched fell easy prey to the flames. The Crown Inn and Bushel and Strike beerhouse were gutted. Barrington – councillors resign Barrington has achieved the unusual double distinction of being without a Vicar and without a Parish Council after the resignation of the chairman and five of the other seven members. The clerk turned up for the annual meeting of the council with his case of books though he knew no meeting could be held as three members are required to form a quorum and there were only two members left. It did not seem worth getting the key for the school so an informal meeting was held outside in the presence of two reporters and three villagers who strolled up to see what was happening. The situation was irresistibly funny and merry laughter rose with the tobacco smoke – for smoking was permitted 14 04 17e, d – editorial

Barrington's Difficulties. Today (writes Free Lance) the parish of Barrington is in the unfortunate position of being without a Vicar and a Parish Council. This "double event" was the cause of a good deal of good-humoured comment on Wednesday night, when a meeting of the Council should have taken place, but had to stand adjourned on account of the wholesale resignation of the members. The two events, of course, have no relationship to each other and it is anticipated within a very short time a new Vicar will be offered the living, which is, I believe, in the gift of Trinity College. Matters connected with the Parish Council and the Village Green, however, are not likely to be settled so quickly, judging by the general tone adopted by the two sets of contending parties. What has happened is that since the recent parish meeting the whole of the councillors, with two exceptions, have tendered their resignations, and as three constitutes a quorum, it is impossible for the present two members to transact any parish business. As a matter of fact, in response to the notice calling this week's meeting, only one turned up. - 1914 04 17 CIPof

Death of Mr. John Peacock. We regret to announce the death at the advanced age of 79 years of Mr. J Peacock, which took place at his residence, the Cross Keys, Caxton, on Sunday. For some months he had been in failing health, which gave great anxiety to his friends, but he only took to his bed on Thursday last. Although suffering from a complication of diseases, he was cheerful to the last. His familiar figure will be greatly missed at Cambridge, St. Neots and other local .markets, which he attended when in his usual health. As a keen sportsman, no one was better known to the members of the Cambridgeshire Hunt, in which he always took the keenest interest. In politics, he was a staunch Conservative, although not taking a prominent part. For many years he was Sanitary Inspector under the Caxton and Arrington Rural District Council and also a member of the Caxton Parish Council, being also Overseer. Although the King's visit is to be regarded as one specially made to the Leys School, the townspeople are naturally taking a keen interest in the event. His Majesty will motor from Newmarket and is due to arrive at the Leys at 11 a.m. It is probable he will reach the outskirts a few minutes before that hour and will proceed to the school via Newmarket Road, East Road, Lensfield Road and Trumpington Road. Upon arrival at the school, the King will be received by a guard of honour consisting of members of the school's Junior Officers' Training Corps and met by Dr. Barber, the headmaster and members of the governing body He will then be conducted to the chapel to view the memorial erected to the memory of the Old Leysians who fell in the South African War. Following this he will proceed to the large hall and receive an address of welcome. Then His Majesty will inspect the gymnasium, swimming baths, science buildings, etc. In accordance with a request made by the Mayor of Cambridge (Mr. J. A. This is perhaps, the most convenient spot for the schoolchildren to as-semble and they will line up on either side. # c.02 # c.36.5 – 1914 04 24 CIPof

G.P.O. workmen have been busy erecting poles for the extension of the telephone in Cottenham. Although this village was one of the first to have a public call office, thanks to the late Mr R. Ivatt, very little has been done recently to extend or popularise it, one of the obstacles being the cost of

The little child of Mr A.G. Prime had a narrow escape from death by drowning at Swavesey. His mother was wheeling the babe in a perambulator near Moor Fen Gatehouse and stopped to tie the bootlace of her small son who was walking beside her. The roadway sloped from the railway gates so she turned the perambulator crossways to prevent it running away. But a goods train passed and shook the carriage which ran into a deep ditch close by. The strap broke and the child fell out. Without a moment's hesitation Mrs Prime jumped into the mud and water to rescue her son 14 05 01a

Even the casual observer cannot fail to have noticed the remarkable increase in the number and variety of motor cycles and their greatly increased popularity not only among the young bloods of the Varsity but among staid and sober individuals of maturer ages and less agility. King's visit to Leys School – 14 05 01i, j, k, l
Royal Visit.—Cambridge people, young and old, rose to the occasion splendidly, and in manner right royal, in according His Majesty King George V a right hearty Fen-man's welcome yesterday on the occasion of his private visit to the Leys School (writes Free Lance). Had the visit been of an official character, the populace could not have given greater evidence of their love and esteem for the Throne and its occupant, and in view of its private nature. His Majesty cannot have been other than extremely gratified at his cordial reception. After the continued spell of brilliant weather which we have been experiencing for the past few weeks, the dull sky brought with it just a touch of disappointment that the royal weather could not have continued, at any rate, for just one day longer. Still, the rain which threatened in the early morning held off and the whole proceedings passed off in capital fashion. It was certainly a Red Letter Day in the annals of the Leys School, which has made such headway in the higher educational world of recent years, and it was also a day which will be remembered by the younger generation of the Borough, who were privileged to see their Sovereign and give proof of their loyalty. # c.02 – 1914 05 01 CIPof

Appeals for people to decorate their houses along the King's route to the Leys School were effective. Along Newmarket Road and East Road houses vary in size but an elaborate display of flags and bunting had been arranged. The favourite plan was a Union Jack hung from the bedroom window or bunting arranged along the window ledges, busin3esses were tastefully embellished while scores of streamers were hung across the road with a tremendous banner inscribed 'Cambridge Working Men's Club'. Many of the side streets made good displays 14 05 01e

Two petitions were thrown at the King's car as he made his way to the Leys School, one landed on top of the car, the other struck the chauffeur in the face. That the King would be in a closed car was obviously not anticipated. Very few people observed the actions of the suffragettes, so quietly were they carried out. The petitions begged the King to reconsider his refusal to receive Mrs Pankhurst's deputation. 14 05 01f

The King's car slowed down near Bottisham Vicarage where the schoolchildren had assembled. Bugler Bowers, of the Boy Scouts, gave the signal of the King's approach and the children sang the National Anthem. The well-known house, 'The Swan' was beautifully decorated and the church flag floated proudly in the breeze from the tower. A Guineas Victim.—"Guineas" week, and one recalls (says a writer), perhaps, the most unforgiving enemy Newmarket ever made. Coke o' Norfolk went to the races there when a young man, lost his money and never forgave the scene of his discomfiture to the end of his days. He went further. He taught his son to regard the place with abhorrence. Death of Mr. George Kett.—It is with much regret that we record the death of Mr. George Kett, which occurred at his residence, Wymondham House, Cambridge, on Wednesday. During the last two years or so, Mr. Kett had been in failing health, but it was not until about five or six weeks ago that pronounced weakness necessitated his remaining at home. Death was due to heart failure. The passing of Mr. George Kett removes a notable figure from Cambridge municipal and ecclesiastical circles. His public career was most noteworthy, for on no fewer than three occasions was he the Mayor of the town. Both as civic head of the Borough and in the more limited capacity of an Alderman of the Corporation, Mr. Kett discharged his duties with a uniform courtesy which won for him the admiration of his colleagues in municipal government and a legion of friends in the town. It was in April, 1882, that the deceased gentleman entered the Council Chamber, and after seven years' sterling service on the Corporation and in committee work his claims to an Aldermanic seat were recognised, and up to last November he was regularly re-elected an Alderman of the Corporation. Last year, however, Mr. Kett expressed a desire to retire from municipal life, and it was with the deepest regret that all members of the Council received the intimation of Aid. Kett's retirement. For many years he was head of the firm of Rattee and Kett, ecclesiastical masons, and there is hardly a church of note in England to which the firm has not contributed some work. – 1914 05 08 CIPof

Colne May Day festivities – detailed report – 1914 05 08k

May Day celebrations have been a feature in the village of Colne as far back as the oldest inhabitants can remember. In the old time garlands of flowers surrounding a doll were suspended across the streets over which the children threw balls. In more recent years the school children have chosen one of their number by ballot to be crowned as Queen and in 1914 an elaborate ceremony took place in the schoolyard. The children, who had been most efficiently trained by the Headmistress (Miss Newman) and the Infant School Teacher (Miss James) with the help of the monitoresses (the Misses O. Fear & E. Brown) assembled in the infant room for the purpose of dressing. The Queen wore a white dress, train and veil and her crown and garland were of white and pink flowers. The maids of honour train-bearers and flower girls were also dressed in white and wore wreaths and carried garlands of apple blossom. The herald was suitably attired in a green suit, with three-cornered hat. The school boys had been grouped on either side of the playground and joined in the May songs. A large number of parents and friends assembled outside the school to witness the ceremony. … ceremony described in detail … paraded … after which the Queen with attendants took their seats in a van lent by Mr J. Pomfret and the other children in a large van lent by Mr King. Both vans were prettily decorated with flowers and drawn by horses. The Coronation group and the two vans were photographed by Stanley Christmas before starting round the villages of Colne, Somersham, Bluntisham & Earith. The children proceeded slowly through the streets singing appropriate May songs and escorted by four young collectors. Contributions went towards 'The Children's Summer Outing Fund'. In spite of the unfavourable weather the festival was a great success and the processionists arrived back at school at 5 pm with light hearts and heavy money boxes. The proceeds amounted to £3 16 6 which has been supplemented by a donate of 10s 6d from Mr Richardson 14 05 08k # c.39

A pair of little brown owls have laid their eggs in the furnace of a portable boiler used for washing beehives on Chivers farm at Histon. Of course the fire has not been lighted recently but the copper is used every day, and when the owls are at home they do not mind this at all. They find their way in and out by the small iron chimney attached to the copper. These owls are not indigenous: Lord Lilford brought a pair from Spain and kept them in captivity near Thrapston. They thrived and he turned them into the open. They have multiplied and are now fairly common 14 05 15a # c.19

A disastrous fire occurred at Stephen Parson's farm in Horselode Fen, Chatteris. A straw stack was struck by lightning and in a short time the stackyard was in flames. The Fire Brigade was hampered by the scarcity of water on these fen farms. Two of three buildings were destroyed. The Fear of Rates. At Tuesday's meeting of the Cambridge Education Committee (writes Free Lance), a satisfactory report was received from Dr. Andrew Laird with regard to the medical inspection of school children. One is gratified to know that such excellent work is being accomplished but it seems that the Education Committee is moving rather too rapidly, in order to bolster up grandmotherly legislation, largely at the expense of the ratepayers. The cost of elementary education is rapidly growing — at Tuesday's meeting a substantial increase in salary was recommended for the Education Secretary — and I think the Education Committee might well call a halt at the present juncture. A new school is to be erected, salaries are increasing all round, and the rates are leaping up at an alarming rate. Dr. Fletcher suggested that even the fear of rates should not deter the Committee from its work in connection with medical inspection, but I imagine that his sentiments will not be cordially re-echoed by the great majority of ratepayers, who constantly feel the pinch of the increased burden of taxation. - 1914 05 15 CIPof

Owls' Strange Home.—A pair of little brown owls have made their home in a remarkable place on one of the farms of Messrs. Chivers and Sons, Histon. They have laid their eggs in the furnace of a portable boiler used for washing beehives, and their larder is well-stocked. Of course, the fire has not been lit recently, but the copper is used every day, and when the owls are at home they do not mind this at all. "The Rose of Persia." — Those residents of Cambridge and district who attended the New Theatre last night have but one opinion on this year's production by the Cambridge Amateur Operatic Society, and that opinion is a highly complimentary one. "The Rose of Persia" is a worthy successor to "The Mikado," "The Yeoman of the Guard," "The Sorcerer," "Trial by Jury" and "Les Cloches de Cornville," which have been produced with conspicuous success by this talented company of amateurs. "The Rose of Persia," full of clever lyrics, has a delightfully entertaining and unique plot, and the music has all the irresistible appeal of Sullivan. The singing throughout was quite up to the high standard which has come to be associated with the Society. The chorus work was excellent, and the whole production reflected the greatest credit on all concerned. Football Amalgamation. Considerable interest was attached to the annual meetings of the Cambridge Town and Cambridge United Football Clubs, held last Monday night. At both meetings the members had under consideration the suggestion that the clubs should amalgamate, and the proposal being agreed upon, a joint meeting is to be held at the Castle Hotel this (Friday) evening, when the officers will foe elected. There was some opposition at the United meeting, but no one seconded a motion that the clubs should continue on its own. At the Town meeting Dr. Apthorpe Webb said if there were any individual feelings, they must sink them. If they were to succeed in the bigger competitions they were going in for next season they must play better football, and to that end they must get the best men possible. This was what they could do through amalgamation. # c.38 : football – 14 05 22 CIPof

Daily Occurrence. An interesting little scene takes place daily at Harston. A dog comes out of his kennel and waits while a family hen produces her contribution to the provisions of the Three Horse-shoes inn and coolly walks in and takes his nap beside the egg until one or other of the family fetches it in, daring all other hens to enter his house, although they watch their chance. Lost in the Channel. - All hope has now been abandoned of again seeing Mr. Gustav Hamel, the famous aviator, alive. Mr. Hamel, after his brilliant display of flying and looping at Cambridge on Thursday last, departed for Paris with the intention of bringing back a new Morane-Saulnier monoplane, driven by a 160 m.p.h Gnome motor with which he intended to compete in the Aerial Derby round London on Saturday, Owing to the weather conditions the race was postponed, but Mr. Hamel was not aware of this, and he started from Villacoublay at half past four o'clock on Saturday morning, and landed at Le Crotoy, near Lille, about an hour later. He was afterwards reported as having landed at Hardelot and later at Boulogne. He is said to have left Boulogne at half past one o'clock, and afterwards to have been seen at Calais, but after that all traces of his flight have been lost. The weather in the Channel on Saturday was extremely unfavourable for flying. Search was made in the Channel and the North Sea by ships, but on Tuesday all hope was given up. # c.26.1 – 14 05 29a,8 - 14 05 29 CIPod

Ex-Alderman of County Council. —The death of Mr. W. J. Clark occurred at his residence, the Manor House, Thriplow, on Thursday afternoon. He had been in failing health for some years. Mr. Clark was well-known throughout the counties of Cambridge and Hertfordshire as a zealous public servant, and his genial manner won for him the highest regard and esteem of all. He was one of the first members of the Cambridgeshire County Council, and subsequently his claims to an aldermanic seat were recognised by the Council. Considerations of health resulted in Ald. Clark giving up a work which was very dear to him. As a Justice of the Peace, a Guardian member of the Melbourn Rural District Council and a member of the Thriplow Parish Council, Mr. Clark's work was performed with .a commendable thoroughness, and the public life of the district has sustained a great loss by the removal of this strong personality. For some considerable period. Mr. Clark was Chairman of the local Parish Council, and at the time of his death he held the office of overseer. Church affairs also appealed to Mr. Clark and for the past 20 years he had been intimately associated with the well-being of St. George's as a churchwarden. The deceased gentleman was a native of Thriplow, and had lived in the village for the greater part of his life. An Inquiry was held into council proposals to borrow money to purchase a recreation ground in Newnham. It was Lammas Land where people had common rights to pasture a cow between August and April. At present it was being used for cricket, football and golf. There was no golf course, play being with a club and ball. But they had no business there which is why it should become a recreation ground giving access to the whole of the river. At present the lands belonged to colleges and others and were fenced only by hedges 14 06 19 p10 # c.32.3

May Week's Decline. May Week closed on Wednesday night (writes a correspondent) and it will be remembered as the low-water mark in the long series of "Mays" which had brightened Cambridge for so many years. Tradesmen who had been interviewed were unanimous in the view that business has never been so dull during May Week as it has been this year. The gaiety and brightness which has for so long been associated with the annual social week has diminished, and it is an undeniable fact that the number of visitors to the town shows a considerable decrease as compared with that of last year. The question, "Do you think May Week is declining?" was put to many people during the past few days and the reply invariably received was "Without a doubt it is". # c.36.97 – 1914 06 19 CIPof

The Curfew Bell. At the monthly meeting of the Haverhill Urban Council on Monday, Mr.W.C. Scott said he would like to ask if there was any information about the early morning bell. He would like to ask if it cost 2s, per week. Did they not think it was time in an enlightened age to drop such ringing? He thought it was an absolute waste of money to have that bell tinkling. Mr. Unwin replied that the curfew bell has been ringing a good many years. When the Council took up the duties of the Burial Board they continued the curfew. He was sorry to say that owing to illness the ringing of the bell had recently been discontinued, but it had been rung in the evenings. Mr. Scott gave notice that at the next meeting a resolution would be proposed that the ringing of the bell be discontinued. – 1914 06 19 CIPof

It was the practice for bodies of paupers who had died at Linton workhouse to be taken by bearers straight to the grave on the hearse. But relatives of a Duxford person had wanted to take the body before it went to the graveyard for interment so they could put handles and a breastplate on the coffin to give the impression the funeral was a private one. The Storms. During the past week Cambridge has been visited by two severe thunderstorms. On Friday the lightning was very vivid at times, and following one vivid flash, a horse, belonging to Mr. Lander, Merton Cottage, Grantchester, fell down on the Mill Road and expired. The animal had been killed by the lightning. Another storm burst over the town on Sunday afternoon and although of short duration, was very sharp while it lasted. Some hours before the storm burst the sky had been overcast.

About 2 o'clock several heavy claps of thunder were heard, and rain began to descend in torrents. In places large hall-stones fell. Vivid flashes of forked lightning preceded each crash of thunder. A house in Histon Road was struck, damage being done to a chimney. Two ladies, Mrs. Lumb and her daughter, who were standing opposite, received a bad shock, the elder lady being knocked down and rendered unconscious. Another flash appears to have struck the Queen's Arms public house in Histon Road. Two chimneys were damaged and a signboard destroyed. Several things inside the house were destroyed, including a looking glass, which, although thrown several feet away, remained intact. There were many instances of basements being flooded. The storm was all over in half an hour, and the remainder of the day was fine. – 1914 06 26 CIPof

Mr Ablewhite described a visit to a shelter provided by the Insurance Committee for a consumptive patient at Cheveley. He had expected to find a fine building, well provided with medical officers, nurses and equipment, instead of which he found a small wooden building, only capable of holding a bed and a chair, set up in the backyard of a cottage. But such shelters in cottage gardens are giving excellent results and consumption is cured by fresh air and food, not by bricks and mortar. 14 07 03

Oakington houses poor: Inspector of nuisances reported a bad case of overcrowding at Oakington where a small cottage with one lean-to bedroom was occupied by a man and wife and six children. There was also said to be a lodger. There were no other houses in the village at all. They had been trying to build some cottages for six months but had been unable to do so. Under the present circumstances it looked as if no cottage would be built for at least twelve months. The landlord would not spend a penny on the place. The Medical officer applied for a closing order. In another house occupied by an elderly couple the landlord did not care whether it was closed or not. His tenants did not Pay much rent and he would probably use it as stables or warehousing. Three houses adjoining one another were extremely old and very dilapidated and the inspector felt almost afraid to walk across the bedroom floor. Mr Rowley asked if they could not have a good fire there. It would be a good thing provided no one was hurt. But it was a serious thing to close five houses in one parish. The people could not find houses. But these could be repaired and put in order but the landlord objected to do any repairs and unofficially he declined to do any. A closing order did not mean ejectment. It gave the landlord warning to repair the houses and make them habitable or close them. 14 07 03

Open air meeting in Cambridge: A thousand men engaged in agriculture would automatically provide for at lease another thousand in various manufacturing industries. By enabling a greater number of people to live on the land they would provide more work for people in the towns. That was the only way to find a permanent solution to the problems of unemployment. 14 07 03

The Government had decided to build 120,000 cottages in rural districts to supply the present shortage and they would continue to build to meet the growing demand. Such cottages would be provided with gardens as large as the applicants could cultivate and would be available not only for farm labourers but for town workers as well. Cheap transit would be established so that townsmen could travel a few miles to and from their work at fares they could well afford to pay. The municipalities would still have the duty of housing the working classes in their areas satisfactorily and unless they did not do so they would not receive grants of many millions per annum which Mr Lloyd George was doing to set aside for the relief of local rates. They would be able to purchase land for this and all other public purposes at its fair market value, the price being set by Commissioners. That would bring to any end the extortionate prices which public authorities had been compelled t pay for land in the past. Speeches were cut short by the rain. 14 07 03

Crime committed by youths has always been common in Cambridge. If thieving is more common here, it is because of the much greater temptations. The stealing of bicycles and their accessories is one of the commonest crimes, due largely to the careless manner in which the machines are left about by undergraduates. It is sad to think that robberies by youths are becoming more frequent but this is due to greater laxity on the part of parents in the control of their children p8

Barrington houses inquiry into housing accommodation found many cases of insanitary conditions and overcrowding and difficulties had been experienced in dealing with such cottages because they had problems finding better accommodation or indeed accommodation at all. The cottages they had at present were not large enough for their families, or the young men wanted to be married and could not find accommodation. If the public authority were to build cottages they could not work them at the present rents and wanted to know what rent applicant felt himself able to pay. If thje council were to build some cottages and let them at a rent what was not sufficient to pay the cost, the ratepayers would make up the deficiency.. 14 07 03

Dr Anningson said he and the Health Inspector had been handicapped in dealing with questions of overcrowding owing to dilapidated houses. There were houses which were unfit, but because there were no others to live in they were occupied. If a better class of cottages were built there would be a move up from the smaller and worse cottages on the part of those who could afford to pay the higher rent and set the smaller houses free for smaller families and for those who could not afford a small rent. Mr Douglas said he was living in a cottage that was not big enough for the family, and he did not know where to get another one. Barrington parish council wrote twelve months ago saying there were sufficient cottages for the need of the parish under normal conditions. It was not apparent that newly-married couples had any difficulty in getting accommodation. That might be altered now There were forty people in Barrington who worked in Shepreth; were they going to provide cottages for them in Shepreth. William Hunt said his wife had to live in one room, and he in another, because they could not get a house. H. Neve wanted a cottage. He was a single man and wanted to get married. Mr Conder said each cottage ought to have a little piece of ground to go with it. They wanted a garden, a fair-sized one where they could grown vegetables. There ought to be a quarter of an acre with every house, and never less. If you allow a quarter of an acre, you will make the rents more. The council could not build cottages at half-a-crown a week. Nothing less than 3/6 would cover the expense of building. They would consider making them worth a little more by adding a piece of ground. They could build lath and plaster houses cheaper. They would last a couple of hundred years. They are much more comfortable and much drier that brick houses and they will last a sufficient length of time. But it is the Local Government Board who have a fixed idea as to what cottages should be 14 07 03

The quality, however, was a marked improvement upon the previous year, the lambs, taken all through, being full of condition and strong. There was a very large attendance of buyers from Essex, Suffolk, Norfolk, Cambs and Herts. Trade was sharp, with an advance on last year's sale of 6s to 7s per head for best lambs and 2s on middle-class. "Merrie England."—The Cambridge Choral Society are to be highly congratulated on the excellent performance of the Concert Version of "Merrie England" which they save last evening in the Cambridge Guildhall. Without disparagement to the previous efforts of the Society this showed a distinct advance, and great praise is due to Mr. Harry Bedwell for the work he has put in in training both chorus and orchestra. We feel sure he feels amply repaid by the excellent rendering secured. The chorus work, with the exception of some weak leads in the first part, was very creditable, though at times there was a tendency to sacrifice quality for quantity among the sopranos. The balance of parts was good. The orchestra too showed improvement. Faulty Intonation was somewhat frequent among the wood wind, and in the accompaniments to the songs, the most difficult part of the orchestral work, there was sometimes noticed a lack of sympathy with the soloist. The Rustic dance and jig gave a good opportunity, which was taken full advantage of. Of the soloists, nothing but praise can be said, and their part singing, duet and quartet, was admirable. – 1914 07 10 CIPof

County Show.—The 51st annual show of the Cambridgeshire and Isle of Ely Agricultural Society was held at Ely on Tuesday in glorious weather. This year's exhibition will certainly rank among the Society's successes, for not only were the entries well up to the average, but, thanks to the fine weather, the attendance was very satisfactory, whilst the quality of the exhibits was high The show was held in a paddock just off the Littleport road, kindly placed at the disposal of the Society by Mr T, B. Granger. There was an unusually fine display of implements. So far as the entries were concerned there was a good average in the Shires and Hackneys, some of the classes being very strong. Quite a record was set up in the cattle section, the dairy cattle being an especially fine lot. In one class there were 19 entries, although in some of the others the numbers were not so satisfactory. After an interval of 12 years pigs were re-introduced, but probably owing to the fact not being very widely known, the entries were not so .large as might have been expected. If the restrictions permit, the prizes will be continued another year, when it may be confidently anticipated the section will be better supported. The arrangements were admirably carried out, while the judging gave very general satisfaction – 1914 07 17 CIPof

Death of the Earl of Ellesmere. The death occurred on Monday morning of the Earl of Ellesmere at Bridgewater, where he had been lying for some days in a critical condition The news was received with great regret at Stetchworth and Newmarket, where His Lordship was very popular and always regarded as a first rate sportsman and landlord He was born in 1847, and while he was still at school his father died, and he succeeded to the family titles and estates as third Earl of Ellesmere. The Earl took a comparatively small part in politics, his chief interest, apart from the many claims his wealth and position made upon him. Being given to racing, Lord Ellesmere leaves surviving four sons and five daughters. His eldest son, Viscount Brackley, who succeeds to the title, was born in 1872, is married and has three daughters – 1914 07 17 CIPof

101 Years Old.—In a little cottage, situated on the Cambridge Road close to the Great Northern Railway Bridge, Great Shelford, there lives today a wonderful old lady. Mrs. Mary Ann Moor, a native of Cambridge, but who has spent very many years at Shelford, celebrated her 101st birthday on Tuesday. She is, unfortunately, suffering from a fractured shoulder and this has necessitated her spending her birthday in her bedroom For all this she was cheerful, chatted with her friends, helped to eat her birthday cake, enjoyed some fruit and partook of a glass of port in celebration of the event. – 1914 07 17 CIPof

The whole of the Watts' Timber Yard on Newmarket Road., including sawmills, drying sheds and kilns were destroyed by fire. The blaze started in the stoke hole from which flames spread to the engine room and brick-making shed adjoining. The saw-mill nearby, containing a lot of wood, was soon alight and the wind blowing from Newmarket Road swept the blaze to the drying sheds and kilns where workmen removed the bricks. The tall chimney was expected to fall at any moment but the gable end of the saw-mill fell outwards, just missing firemen standing beneath it. However sheds holding valuable stock of flooring boards were put out. 14 07 24 # c.34.75

When W.H. Moult took up the position of head at Soham Grammar School in 1855 it consisted of one room divided by a partition. Only one part was occupied owing to the small number of pupils. That one room had to be used as a dining room and a sitting room for the masters. Mr Mould came from Suffolk and a large number of pupils followed him, many of whom came from Germany, Bordeaux, Normandy and Paris. Within six months he had to have an assistant. Today instead of 12 pupils there is an average of 65. There is a laboratory and woodwork department and a row of cottages alongside have been purchased. John Titterton, the artist, sportsman, photographer came to Ely as a young man where he lived for nearly 60 years. His father had been the Governor of Peterborough Gaol and Superintendent of rural police at Cambridge; he had taken part in the Battle of Waterloo and rescued the Duke of Wellington when mobbed at Apsley House. John became fascinated by astronomy and took photographs of solar spots, receiving encouragement from Sir John Herschel. He was a successful photographer in the time of the wet plate process and it was pathetic to look through thousands of old negatives and realised how many Ely friends had passed away. Titterton was a racy and versatile writer and as a representative of the Press he wrote a great deal of copy relating to old Ely. He was also a clever artist and his painting were greatly admired. Many were of an historical character, the most famous being 'The building of Ely Minster'. 14 07 24 # c.65.5

The farm labourers strike is continuing and in view of the nearness of the harvest steps are being taken to import labour. Mr Webb of Streetly End has charge of recruiting and has been to Cambridge on market days endeavouring to secure 150 men, offering £8 a month plus lodgings. All classes of men are being taken on. At Weston Colville practically all workers reconsidered their decision and accepted the harvest upon the terms offered. But then they were advised by a Union official and again 'downed tools' leaving farmers with only a dozen hands between them. On Wednesday many of the strikers were enjoying a game of cricket 14 07 24 # c.22

Disastrous Fire. Considerable damage was done at Cambridge on Wednesday by a serious outbreak of fire at the premises of Messrs. Watts and Sons Ltd. Newmarket Road. Sunstroke. Owing to the excessive heat on Tuesday Mr. Frederick Lofts, a farm labourer, working for Mr. Robert Brand, of the Grange Farm, Duxford, was taken ill with sunstroke. He also had a lucky escape from being burnt to death, for Lofts and Mr. Sayers were burning some rubbish in the farmyard when Lofts became unconscious and fell on the fire. Mr. Sayers, who was close by, ran up and pulled him off. He then called for assistance, and Mr. Lofts was sent home in a cart. He had sunstroke 24 years ago. We are pleased to say he is progressing very favourably. – 1914 07 24 CIPof

Although the entries at this, the 29th exhibition under the auspices of the Society, showed a slight decrease in those of last year, the quality of the animals left nothing to be desired. The weather conditions were dull, but the threatening rain fortunately held off and considerable interest was manifested in the judging by those who lined the ropes of the ring– 1914 07 24 CIPof

Friendly Society Worker. Of the many Friendly Society stalwarts in Cambridgeshire, few are held in higher esteem than Mr. J. M. Taylor, of Histon, Past Patriarch, etc., of the Sons of Temperance Friendly Society. It can be said of Bro. Taylor more, perhaps, than of most friendly society men, that he is a born organiser. Few are more gifted in this respect, and the growth of the S.O.T. Order throughout the Country can be traced largely to his unbounded enthusiasm and keenness in spreading the friendly society gospel and to his great interest in the temperance cause. Thoroughness characterises his work, for he believes firmly in the old adage that what is worth doing is worth doing well. He is a native of Camberwell.- 1914 07 31 CIPof

Death of Mr. J, A. P. Titterton. We regret to record the death, which occurred after a long illness, of Mr. John Titterton, one of Ely's oldest and respected citizens. An artist, sportsman, photographer, antiquarian and astronomer, the deceased went to Ely as a young man, residing there for nearly 60 years. He was assisted in scientific matters by Professor Selwyn. He became fascinated by astronomy and did good work under the Royal Astronomical Society in completing an entire series of photographs of the solar system. Mr. Titterton had also the reputation of being a clever artist, his oil and water colour paintings being much admired

Teachers' Scale Criticised. A meeting of the Cambs. Teachers' Association was held at Cambridge on Saturday to consider the new scale of salaries for the County. Mr. H. G. Powell, who spoke on "The Salaries Movement in Cambridgeshire", said the increase in teachers' salaries had been anticipated for a long while. Teachers in Cambridge could not congratulate themselves on the generosity of their salaries. Class teachers were not paid well enough to enable them to fulfil their proper duties. It was impossible to obtain a man's highest standard for a paltry £120 a year, and it was unfair to pay fully qualified teachers that amount (Applause). A member of the Education Committee has expressed the opinion that it was impossible for a secondary school teacher (then grammar school) to live decently on £160 to £170 a year. # c.36 - 1914 07 31 CIPof

The army reservists, including a dozen members of the police force, received orders to join the colours without delay. About 20 left Cambridge station that evening by the mail trail. They received a hearty send off from a crowd of 250 which included a cornet player from the Salisbury Club. The train was a little late and the men had a long wait which was enlivened when the crowd sang patriotic songs. When the train steamed out the crowd sang ‘Auld Lang Syne’ and cheered till it was out of sight

The Cambridge squadron of the Royal Suffolk Yeomanry paraded and were sent to their billets at Ross Street school and the County Girls School. A number of others were quartered in the Corn Exchange. The streets presented a military appearance. Territorials in uniform carrying their kit bags and rifles were to be seen. Officers in motorcars or motor cycles and orderlies on bicycles were hurrying to and fro, sentries with fixed bayonets were posted at the Corn Exchange and vehicular traffic stopped by the police 14 08 07

Men of the First Eastern General Hospital were quartered in Corn Exchange Street. An elaborate scheme was drawn up fir constituting Cambridge a great hospital centre and the various college buildings were mapped out for conversion into wards. But this scheme is intended in case of invasion and it is to be hoped will never be needed. At present the need is for accommodation at places were wounded men are likely to be landed 14 08 07

Local farmers have expressed fears they will not be able to get through their harvest because the Government wants their horses for military purposes. But definite instructions have been given not to take any horses required for harvest. At the same time horses are greatly needed and the public will be doing a great and patriotic service if they will place all they can possibly spare at the disposal of the government by notifying the nearest police station. Major Phillips of the Hussars is in Newmarket purchasing hacks for the Government. Prices offered are as high as £50 for anything special. Army officers and men are similarly engaged in Cambridge

Prices of provisions have been forced up almost to famine pitch by the selfish actions of people who are laying in large supplies. The cost of all foodstuffs have gone up by leaps and bounds: on Tuesday sugar and butter rose a halfpenny a pound, flour four pence a stone and butter to one shilling and sixpence. Cambridge Co-op admits there was a temporary shortage but there is sufficient stuff at the docks and there should be no real shortage. Butchers decided to raise the price of meat due to the increased cost of cattle and pigs. Mt Adkins said he was selling the bone with the meat at the same price for which he previously sold the meat alone

The European Blaze,—The long anticipated crisis has come and Cambridge and Cambridgeshire in common with the rest of the Empire is in the grip of a patriotic war fever. The temperature of the loyalists' stands higher to-day than it has ever done in history, not only of the British Empire, but of the world. The fever-heat engendered by the South African War is as nothing compared with the ardour and enthusiasm shown during the past week by Britishers both at home and abroad. Of panic there is none. A few scaremongers there may be, and the voice of the Little Englander is once more to be heard. Thank goodness it comes, as it always has, and as we trust it always will, from the wilderness. This mean section of the populace we shall always have with us even in stirring times like the present, but their screeching and squealing are only to be faintly heard in the brief lulls which occur between the surging roar of the intensely loyal, patriotic, confident band of Britishers who have placed their faith in the heads of the Empire, from King George V down to the most humble Minister of the Crown, and with the motto "God defend the right" were never more sanguine of complete victory, to be followed by a lasting peace. As in the past, we are proud of our Cambridge-shire men. Many are in the front rank of the battle, which, at the time of writing, is being waged in the North Sea and the Mediterranean. Others are in the main Army which is ready for offensive or defensive purposes. We have been amazed at the number who have .responded to the call for Reservists both on sea and land, and we are confident that not one of us had any idea that in our midst so many of those dwelt following their daily avocations ready at a moment's warning to take up arms for their country. It is scarce six months since the County Territorials responded to an appeal to bring the Battalion up to full strength. How nobly they responded to the appeal we all know, and little did we dream at the time that the call to arms | would come so soon. It is good to note with what eagerness and cheerfulness our Cambridgeshire lads have come forward for the mobilisation, and how anxious they are to be allowed to take at least some share, be it great or small, in the defence of our Island home. – 1914 08 07 CIPof

How Cambridge Mobilised. Throughout the first two or three days of the week Cambridge residents experienced the feeling of tension which has been typical of the country. Large crowds of townspeople have assembled outside newspaper offices during the week, in order to learn the latest war news, and such anxiety has not been displayed since the dark days of the South African War. Until the early hours of Wednesday morning, large numbers of Cambridge people paraded the streets in the hope of hearing some news as to the reply of Germany to the British ultimatum, and when the intelligence of war with Germany became known, the tension of the previous few days was partially relieved. Late on Sunday, and early on Monday morning, Cambridge members of the Naval Reserve received notices calling upon them to report themselves at their respective headquarters. There was a large number of Naval Reservists in Cambridge, and the men immediately proceeded to Portsmouth, Chatham and other important naval centres. While the effect of the withdrawal of the naval men did not have so drastic an effect as the orders had in coast towns, it was rather surprising to find that in Cambridge there were so many ex-naval men and Marines who had settled down to landsmen's work in the inland town. The calling up of the Army Reserve had an even wider operation, employees in colleges, railwaymen, policemen, postal officials, Vanmen, etc., abandoning their civil occupations at the call of the State. The ailway station presented an animated scene, hundreds of Reservists arriving from all parts of the townand district and proceeding to their regimental headquarters. The local Staff officers of the Territorial Force lso responded to the summons, and rejoined their regiments. # c.45.5 – 1914 08 07 CIPof

At a special meeting of the Cambridge and District Butchers Association, held at the Bath Hotel, Bene't Street, Cambridge, last evening, it was unanimously agreed, on the motion of Mr. C. How Long Wilt the War Last?— The question of how long this great war is likely to last interests every soul in Europe, but it is astonishing to see how wide apart are the different estimates. From three weeks to three years have been suggested as the probable duration of the contest, with every variety of intermediate estimate, and it is evident that few people have given the matter much serious thought (says the "Times" military correspondent). This whirlpool of wars, in which we are suddenly engulfed, we must regard from the German point of view, because Germany has been the aggressor and would be the peacemaker. For Germany a long dragging war is sheer disaster. Her position between two great and hostile military states, the closing of the sea and the paralysis of her whole maritime industries together with the danger which her overseas colonies will incur, absolutely prohibits any German from thinking of a dragging war. There are certainly four, it may he six, million Germans in arms, counting garrisons, depots and reserve, and though German financial experts who have written on war have suggested ways and means for raising the wind for a period of six months, no one has been able to see beyond that term, and moreover the calculation has not been considered that more than three million men will be in the field. – 1914 08 14 CIPof

Wages of Men on Active Service. Their wages varied from 3s. 4d. to 3s. 10d. per day, and it was suggested that during their absence, their position be kept open, and that half-pay should be given. Ald Stace said that other Committees were similarly affected, and he hoped that they would bear this in mind, and treat their employees in the way suggested. Councillor Negus: "It is important that all Committees should act on the same lines, and it is just a question as to whether this ought not to be referred to the General Purposes Committee so that uniform action may be taken (hear, hear). The question was referred to the General Purposes Committee, with power to act. – 1914 08 14 CIPof

East Coast resorts are recovering from the panic which, when the war broke out, caused many Cambridge people to abandon their holidays. Rumours have circulated that visitors to Gt Yarmouth and Gorleston-on-Sea have been requested to leave and no persons are allowed on the sands. Steamships are running along the coast between London and ports in the north of England, proof that no danger exists either to shipping or coastal towns. There is no shortage of food.

Cambridge pubs are to close at 9pm during the presence of the military in the town. It is important that all who are in training here should be guarded against excesses. Cambridge residents are largely to blame for the drunkenness seen during the past few days. They have been encouraging drinking by treating the soldiers, causing a great deal of trouble to the military

Recruiting for the Second Army is going on well with centres set up at Cambridge Corn Exchange and the Prince Albert, Ely. The troops encamped in Cambridge appreciate the way patriotic men and women have welcomed them and ministered to their comforts. Every camp has a tent where tea and coffee, bread and cakes can be obtained with another for reading or writing letters. A post box is cleared every two hours and a stall set up selling envelopes and pencils. It is one of the finest camping grounds they have ever been upon and the large well-kept open spaces are well suited to their new use. 14 08 21 p5 # c.45.5

Busy Histon Factory. A brisk time is being experienced at the Histon factory of Messrs Chivers and Sons, jam and preserve manufacturers, and the greater number of employees who were recently temporarily suspended have been re-engaged in order to cope with demands which have been made on the factory. The sudden mobilisation of the British Army has resulted in an enormous increase of business to the large firms who manufacture and deal in food products. It is almost impossible for the general public to realise what the feeding and equipment of a great army really involves, but the resources of reputable firms throughout the country are being taxed to the full in order to fulfil the large contracts which are being given out. Fortunately a large share of this business is being participated in locally, Messrs. Chivers having received some substantial Army contracts for jams. In order to execute these orders and to meet the increase of general business which has resulted from the declaration of war, Messrs. Chivers' factory at Histon is working at high pressure, thus giving beneficial employment to a large amount of Cambridge labour which would otherwise have been idle. – 1914 08 21 CIPof

Death of General Grierson. The following message was released by the Press Bureau on Monday: "General Grierson died this morning from heart failure while travelling in the train." The death of General Grierson has caused widespread regret throughout the country, and especially in East Anglia where he was well known, having been since 1912 in charge of the Eastern Command. He paid several visits to Cambridge in this capacity. . – 1914 08 21 CIPof

Doing its Share. Histon is doing and evidently means to do its share of the work entailed by the war. Red Cross meetings are frequently taking place for the purpose of stretcher drills, bandaging, etc., and a great deal of interest is being taken in the work. In addition to this, Messrs Chivers have contributed the magnificent sum of 250 gns to the Prince of Wales' Fund. – 1914 08 21 CIPof

Mr W. Jaggard of Tenison Road said he visited the Empire Musical Hall. It was an exceptionally large house and people were sitting on the hot water pipes. A novel concert was given for men encamped on Midsummer Common: the motor launch Viscountess Bury was moored beside the bank at Stourbridge Common and its top deck used by the Magpies Concert Party was a platform. The launch was a pretty sight, decorated with vari-coloured lights and hundreds of men, including officers, sat on the sloping bank. Each song was enthusiastically enjoyed. The vicar of Chesterton gave an address during the interval and invited the men to attend Holy Communion on Sunday morning

A respectable Chesterton chimney sweep was charged with buying two pairs of woollen pants from soldiers camped on Midsummer Common. A constable on duty in plain clothes saw a soldier put something in a white pillowslip he was carrying; when challenged accused said it was food for his children. He found banana, meat and some mackerel, but there were also two pairs of pants with a regimental number – 6178, also W.D. and the broad arrow. The soldier said he was short of money and did not want them; they were hot, woollen things and not necessary at this time of year. Other men stole pants soldiers had washed and put on railings to dry

Many firms are making provision for wives and families left behind, supplementing the men's army wages. The War and Cambridge Trade. S far as Cambridge and the war is concerned (writes Free Lance), I am glad to notice that trade has not suffered in any greater proportion than in other parts of the country; as a matter of fact, I believe I should be right in saying that, compared with other places of its size, Cambridge has suffered less in this respect. This is to be accounted for by the fact that August and September are months looked upon as to all intents and purposes dead so far as Cambridge business is concerned, so that with the advent of the troops many of our tradespeople are in the happy position of being able to boast of a larger turn-over than is usual at this time of the year. The various Relief Funds are coming in splendidly, both in town and county. What I should like to see however is a larger response to Lord Kitchener's appeal for his Second Army. Hitherto, Cambridge could never be accused of lack of patriotism as at the beginning of the year was amply demonstrated by the large number who flocked to enrol in the Territorial Force. Now it is up to our young men to come forward and give further evidence of Cambridgeshire's loyalty and patriotism by offering their service to the Empire in its hour of need. # c.45.5 – 1914 08 28 CIPof

Obituary. We regret to announce the death of Mr, Charles Carter, which took place at his (Histon) home on Saturday morning. Deceased had not been in the best state of health for a considerable time, but the end came suddenly. Mr. Carter was well-known in the village and also in Cambridge, having until recently, carried on the business of market gardening. He was undoubtedly one of the best draught players in the district, having been cham¬pion of Histon Institute several times. The interment took place at the cemetery on Tuesday afternoon, a large number being present at the graveside. – 1914 08 28 CIPof

Industry – effect of the war *
The presence of the military has greatly improved the trade prospects of Cambridge and there is no immediate fear of unemployment. The end of the Long Vacation is always a slack time but at the moment the town is busier than usual. It is not certain the town can rely on the continued presence of troops throughout the war and many firms are not sure how they can keep going. The printing trade has been hit by the stoppage of trade circulars and advertisements, builders say contracts have been postponed putting plasterers & stonemasons out of work and the position of college servants and is being considered. The problems of lodging house keepers may be overcome by the billeting of officers and the presence of relatives of the men in the hospitals. But they may no get the rent usually paid by undergraduates. In laundry work the hospitals and military have gone to the larger laundries and demand from ordinary householders has decreased due to motives of economy. Tailors have sufficient work owing to the army orders but women's outfitting department report a shortage of custom. Several jobbing gardeners are out of work & owners of unused plots should consider putting them into cultivation to grown vegetables. 14 09 04 p5 # c.45.5 # c.27.4 # c.27

Private Duthie, a Yeomanry private, was at Ellington when he asked the name of the village. Sam Heathcote, a dealer, said "I am afraid you are a German" and, taking a gun out of his cart, pointed it at him and threatened to shoot. Duthie said he had the King's uniform on, "So had those four German spies they arrested the other day", Heathcote replied. Duthie had no rifle and informed his companions what had taken place. They then took a rifle from a passing Cyclist Territorial and, although it had no ammunition, told Heathcote to put up his arms or be shot. They took his gun from the cart. The trigger was at full cock with a cartridge in the barrel. He was sentenced to a month's hard labour

Heroes of Mons. - Stirring scenes were witnessed at Cam-bridge on Monday evening, when, with thrilling cheers and tears of sympathy, a large crowd welcomed to the University town, now one of the most important Red Cross Hospital centres, 150 wounded soldiers. "A Righteous and Holy War". Preaching at a drumhead service on Jesus Green, Cambridge, on Sunday morning, the Bishop of Ely (Dr. F. H. Chase) said: "We believe—I have thought about it a great deal—that this is a righteous and holy war. It is that God's rule may come in ways which we cannot understand. And we are as sure as sure can be that God hates as you and I hate, only infinitely more, these acts of cowardly cruelty of which we read in the papers, and He would have these acts—these cowardly and cruel acts—stopped. So you are going out as deliverers in God's Name . . . You are going out, it may be, in God's Providence, as deliverers to take your part in making God's Will done on earth. He may not give us victory so soon as we could wish, but I am certain that never has a prayer been offered which God has not heard, and in His own time, has answered. And so, my Brothers, remember to pray at the beginning of the day and at the end of the day of hard work and danger." - 1914 09 04 CIPof

When the war began Cambridge Scouts were anxious to help and a committee was formed. Requests came from every quarter. For the first fortnight Scout patrols, aided by members of the C.U.O.T.C., guarded by day and night the important telegraph wires on the Newmarket to London road. Some were sent to Ramsgate and Sandwich to do coastguard work until replaced by military authorities. Others assisted in the recreation and refreshment tents for the military camps on Midsummer Common, Coldham's Common, Coe Fen, Parker's Piece, Huntingdon Road and Stourbridge Common. They have provided a secretary and bugler for Major Comber at Pembroke College and at Corpus the Board of Military Studies has used them as messengers. He'd told them the army wanted the horses and would take them; they would pay less than he offered and they'd have to wait for the money. He made it clear he was buying to sell again and wanted to make a bit of profit. But the farmer got the impression he was buying on behalf of the Government and complained to the police.

There were at present about 1,000 soldiers based in Cambridge with another 1,000 expected. All the tents were being used by other troops and winter was coming. The Corn Exchange was unsatisfactory because of the small sanitary arrangements. The Girls' and Boys county school were already being used and now the military wanted Morley Memorial and the Melbourne Place schools for the training of recruits. Emmanuel Church was prepared to give the free use of their schoolroom for the education of the children. The alternative was billeting troops on the better class houses where better class people could supervise them. But the University had been approached and the schools might not be needed, councillors heard. 14 09 18

Ely sewage: road water was conveyed to river by separate channels and the bulk of the sewers converged into small settlement tanks at Common Muckhill and the tank effluent passed into the river without further treatment. They were in close proximity to the population and apart from river pollution considerable local nuisance was created, especially during the emptying operations. There were three district sewage outfalls into roadside dykes, creating considerable nuisance and it would be necessary to connect them to the man system and concentrated at one sewage purification works; this meant pumping. It was an abominable nuisance, *

Rev Hughes, preaching at Soham Baptist Chapel on the war said there were national sins and national punishments. There was desecration of the Sabbath, the mania for gambling and the great thirst for wealth and pleasure. It might be that God had permitted that Great War to bring them to their knees and he hoped that afterwards people would be flocking to the House of the Lord. Germany would reap her punishment for cruelty and deception. England must never withhold her hand until Wilhelm was unseated and his fleet sunk to the bottom of the sea... Militarism and despotism would be put down by England so that Germany could never lift her head again.

A complete military hospital to accommodate 520 patients is to be built on college playing fields, Burrell's Walk. The hospital has to be completed within a month – indeed a considerable part is required within a fortnight so that the present hospital at Trinity College may be vacated before term commences. It will comprise of five wards with 100 beds in each, a supply block, operating theatre, mortuary kitchens etc. This means working at top pressure, night and day. When complete it will be one of the largest of its kind, 14 09 25

County roads must be improved for military transport. Some need to be widened and corners rounded off with the War Office paying much of the cost. At Coton the road will run through Mr Hunt's stackyard, Grantchester church corner needs taking off; the road at Cherry Hinton needs widening near the Robin Hood with more widening in Fulbourn village. All will be strengthened to carry artillery. The idea is to get the military from the west top east without going through Cambridge.

Nearly 200 wounded soldiers arrived at Cambridge in two specially-fitted ambulance trains. They had come straight off the hospital ship that had brought them from France; some had been travelling for four days. They lay on beds arranged in two tiers along the sides of long compartments and were carried on stretchers to the ambulance vans waiting outside the station. Quite a large crowd waiting patiently for several hours to see them arrive and give them a cheer as they were brought out.

Wounded Soldiers. About 200 wounded soldiers arrived in Cambridge in the early hours of Wednesday morning after a long and tiring journey by rail and sea from the front. There were comparatively few Cambridge people at the railway station when the special trains arrived, and with all possible speed under the circumstances the wounded men were conveyed to the East Anglian Divisional Hospital at Trinity College. # c.45.5 – 14 09 25

Cambridge Men on Torpedoed Ships. News of the disaster to three of the cruisers of the British Fleet was officially known on Tuesday. Cambridge men are stated to have been on each of the; three cruisers. H.M. ships Aboukir, Hogue and Cressy were each torpedoed by German submarines and sank. The local men known to have been on board are: H.M.S.; Aboukir: Midshipman C. A. G. Cooke, son of Dr. K. Cooke, Bridge Street, Cambridge. Mr. Cooke was among those saved. HMS Hogue: First Class P.O. Percy James Warrington, Union Road, Cambridge (reported to be safe and to have been landed at Harwich), Signalman John Toombs, East Road, Cambridge and Naval. Reservist

J. L. Claydon, 6, Benson Street, Cambridge; H.M.S, Cressy: Naval Reservist O. Hinson, 57, Garden Walk, Cambridge: Mr. Hinson, who is a married man with one child, has been employed at King's College as a gate porter for about six years. Midshipman Cooke said he was in the water for three quarters of an hour before being picked up by one of the Cressy's cutters. He was afterwards taken on a fishing trawler, later transferred to H.M.S. Legion and landed at Harwich. He is now home in Cambridge on a short leave. Mr. W. Maskell of Sawston, who had a son serving on the Aboukir, received a telegram from him on Wednesday morning to inform him he was among those saved. # c.45.5 14 09 25

Fire. In the early hours of Wednesday morning a fire broke out at the house occupied by Mr. W. Lane in Chapel Yard, Great Shelford. Considerable damage was done, one side of the kitchen being burnt out. But for the efforts of Mr. Whitechurch and Mr V Brunning the whole block of ten houses would have been razed to the ground. It is supposed that the fire was caused by a beam catching fire in the chimney. 14 09 25

A Novel Application. The Chesterton Guardians had a novel application before them at their meeting held yesterday (Thursday), when the Master (Mr. A. Wild) informed the Board that there was a man waiting downstairs who wanted to know if the Board could supply him with a young lady as a wife. During the past month the man had twice been to see him on the same question. He had told the man that he could not help him in the matter, but he wished to see the Board. Mr. Cross: Does he come from Histon? The Master: Yes. He is downstairs. I have not sent him away, but I told him I did not think you could, assist him. Mr. Hawkins: There is no one in the House who would like to, take this post? The Master: I think not, sir. 14 09 25

Wounded Soldiers Return. About five weeks ago, thousands of British soldiers, summoned from all parts of the United Kingdom, were under canvas at Cambridge in readiness for departure to the Front. Their destination was unknown, and it was naturally surmised by the men that they would be going to

Belgium. Yesterday afternoon some of these soldiers returned to Cambridge, maimed in some cases and badly wounded in other cases. The ambulance train arrived at Cambridge about 5 p.m., and contained 130 wounded men from infantry, cavalry and artillery regiments. In 30 cases the soldiers were unable to walk, and were carried from the train on stretchers by the local members of the Voluntary Aid Detachments, and thence to Trinity College, the headquarters of the 1st Eastern General Hospital (T). Included in the wounded were men of the East and West Yorks. Regiments, Royal Fusiliers, R.H.A., Norfolks and Suffolks, and a large pro-portion of them were men of the Brigade which was encamped in Cambridge recently. 14 10 02 # c.45.5

Alderman.—At a special meeting of the Cambridge Borough Council held yesterday, Mr. Walter Hamond Francis was elected an Alderman of the Borough for the remainder of the term of six years to end November 9, 1916, in place of Mr. Alfred Henry Peart, resigned. There were two nominations for the vacancy, and the result of the voting was Councillor W. H. Francis 22 votes; Councillor J. A. Sturton 15. There was one spoilt voting paper.

Squire of Barrington.—It is with regret that we record the death of the Rev. Richard Bendyshe, which occurred at his residence at Barrington Hall on Thursday week. The deceased gentleman was 92 years of age, and for about six years he had been an invalid. Reserved and unostentatious he was, nevertheless, associated with all good works in the parish; his name rarely came before the public as an ardent supporter of the Church, but those who have been behind the scenes can testify to the large degree of assistance which he gave in parochial matters. And the Villagers realise that in the death of the squire they have lost a friend to whom they could appeal in their hours of trouble. The late squire was ordained in 1848, and subsequently held various curacies. We understand that he never held a living. He was the only surviving son of Mr. John Bendyshe, a former High Sheriff of Cambridgeshire, and succeeded to the estate in 1865. His mother was a niece of Admiral Lord Nelson. His heir Col. Bendyshe, of the Royal Marines, is at present on active service. 14 10 02

Cambridgeshire recruit training, Melbourne Place *
The work of raising and training the new Cambridgeshire Battalions is proceeding very satisfactorily. Recruits are being treated well, comfortably houses, warmly clothed and well fed. Their physical improvement has been great and they have mastered the rudiments of drill and learned fixing and unfixing bayonets. When rifles arrive they will be well fitted to bear them.

Troops are based at Melbourne Place School and the County Girls' School where classrooms make admirable barrack rooms. The men sleep on the floor in straw palliasses – canvas bags filled with straw – and a blanket apiece. The kitchens are well equipped and the catering in the hands of Mr G.P. Hawkins of the Dorothy Café.

At Melbourne Place school canteens have been installed adjoining the dining hall. Mr Dodds of the Abbey Stores, Abbey Road has one counter where soldiers can obtain all kinds of groceries, sardines, apples and walnuts together with writing materials, boot polish, braces and bachelors' buttons. Everything is sold at moderate prices. A penny will purchase almost anything in stock. At the wet canteens men can obtain beer or minerals and hot coffee is supplied night and morning.

At Melbourne Place School 'reveille' is sounded at 6 a.m. and, after coffee, men have a spell of Swedish exercises before breakfast. Then there are lectures on musketry or guard-mounting by NCOs, all old soldiers, followed by drill. After dinner there is a short period for a smoke or a look at the papers. Afternoon parade and drill follows, then a lecture before the men go for a short route march during which they are allowed to smoke and exercise their vocal abilities in 'Tipperary'. After tea they are free until 9 pm

Uniform and boots for the soldiers based at Melbourne Place School are expected to arrive shortly. Meanwhile they are wearing their civilian attire but have been issued with shirts and socks. The men seem happy and well-pleased with their lot. One farm labourer from Wood Ditton says "I'm better off now than I ever was. My guvnor's paying me seven shillings a week and I'm getting seven bob here and board and lodgings and clothes". He was contemplating marriage before the call to arms came but he and his sweetheart have patriotically agreed to wait until the war is over. Let us hope their happiness may not long be deferred. 14 10 09

Mayoralty.—Councillor William Luard Raynes, of West Point, Adams Road, a partner of the firm of Messrs. Eaden, Spearing and Raynes, has been offered and has accepted the Mayoralty of the Borough. The invitation to succeed Mr. J. A. Sturton in the Chief Magistracy of Cambridge was ex-tended to Mr. Raynes on Wednesday at a meeting of the Conserva¬tive members of the Corporation, with whom the choice this year, in accordance with the agreement arrived at between the two political parties, rested. Mr. Raynes having accepted the invitation, his nomina¬tion will be submitted to the Liberal members; there is not the least likelihood of any opposition on their part. Mr. Raynes, an M.A. of Cambridge University, has an intimate knowledge of a wide range of subjects, and is an authority on financial matters, and the present sound financial basis of the Corporation's investments are a striking, tribute to his efforts. Few members of the Corpora¬tion worked harder in connection with Town's application for County Borough powers than Mr. Raynes, who was one of the witnesses to give evidence before the House of Commons Select Committee.

Specials:—The special constables sworn in at Royston, numbering 50, commenced duties on Tuesday. Four men are on duty each night from 9 a.m. till midnight. Yester¬day (Thursday) evening all the specials paraded at the Drill Hall for inspection and instructions by Superintendent Reed.

Killed at the Front—Lt.- Col. Richard Eric Benson has died of wounds in hospital in France. He was the fourth son of the late General Benson. He became lieutenant in 1884, and served in the South African War as Adjutant to the 4th Battalion of the East Surrey Regiment in the operations in Cape Colony, receiving the Queen's Medal with two clasps.

Sawston Men Wounded and Missing.—Corporal J. Barker, of the Rifle Brigade, is lying seriously wounded at the base in France. The relatives of Pte. F. Matthews of the Suffolk Regiment have been notified that he has been missing since August 26.

Bourn and the Cambs. Regi¬ment.—A collection has been made among the men of Bourn for special objects connected with the Cam¬bridgeshire Regiment. The sum of £5 2s. has been collected, and of this sum £1 goes to the special fund for providing socks and shirts for the Cambridgeshire Territorials, and £4 2s. to the fund for providing blankets and other winter comforts for Cambridgeshire troops.

Chesterton people had voted against it - in fact nobody wanted it. The only way to overturn the order was by going though all the expense of obtaining another Act of Parliament.

The dentist of the Stapleford & Sawston clinic said that at Stapleford, where the children were re-inspected annually, no teeth were found to be unsaveable. But at Shelford, where work had been interrupted for a year, some children had teeth so decayed as to be beyond saving. This emphasises the importance of annual inspections. Only one treatment was refused at Stapleford where there is no

A target was placed on a wooden shed and the practice proceeded well until a loud crash was heard. Investigations showed their shots had gone through the two sides of the building, across another 25 ft of ground and through a thick door into a quantity of glass windows stored in a brick building. First Cambs. Officer to Fall. Deep regret has been caused throughout Cambridgeshire by the official news that Captain Francis Percy Campbell Pemberton, of the 2nd Life Guards, of Trumpington Hall, was killed in action near Roulers on Monday, October 19. The news was conveyed to members of the deceased officer's family on Friday evening. His Majesty the King, who is Colonel-in-Chief of the Regiment, and Her Majesty the Queen have telegraphed their deep sympathy to Canon and Mrs. Pemberton. Captain Pemberton, who was 29 years of age, was educated at Trinity College, Cambridge. He entered the Army in 1907, and received a captaincy in August last. In May, 1912, he was seconded from his regiment (the 2nd Life Guards) to take up duties of cavalry instructor to the Oxford and Cambridge Officers' Training Corps. The appointment would have expired next March, but on the declaration of war he was recalled to his regiment. Capt. Pemberton was extremely popular and at both Oxford and Cambridge had a large circle of friends. Widespread sympathy is felt for the Canon, Mrs. Pemberton, Miss Pemberton and the widow in their great loss. The news was received with, the deepest regret in Trumpington, where Capt. Pemberton was much beloved. He was a fine all-round sportsman, a splendid cricketer, a keen huntsman and an extraordinarily good shot. He was a member of the County Cricket Club, and Vice-President and mem¬ber of the Trumpington Cricket Club. Shortly before the declara¬tion of war he played for the Village cricket club in their county cup-tie against New Chesterton Institute. He had a great natural gift for music. Capt. Pemberton is the first Trumpington man who has fallen in the war. He is also the first Cambridgeshire officer who has died for his country in this great struggle. The Trumpington estate has been in the Pemberton family since 1675, when it was bought by Francis Pemberton, who became Chief Justice of England and presided at the state trial of Lord Russell. From Francis Pemberton the Trumpington estate has come down in direct line to Captain Pemberton's mother. # c.45.5

More Wounded Arrive. A Great Western Red Cross train arrived at Cambridge on Monday evening with a number of wounded soldiers from the front, including many men of the 6th Division, who were recently at Cambridge. A Grantham glue manufacturing business said he contracted for house bones and butchers bones from Bird’s bone works at Duxford. Several consignments were satisfactory but then the bones sent were of inferior quality. And they came with fat. He did not want it but was obliged to take it and could not send it back. So he reduced the price paid. G. Wheatley, bone merchant said the bones were sold in Cambridge market, he helped load them on the train. Birds said until war came they were not working at a profit; but then their contracts were broken, as their stuff went abroad. They could not get rid of it, meaning prices fell, so he put in his own degreasing plant.

Memorial Service.—How widespread is the sympathy extended to Canon and Mrs. Pemberton, of Trumpington Hall, in the loss of their only son, Capt. P. F. C. Pemberton, 2nd Life Guards, who was killed in action near Roulers on October 19, and with the gallant officer's widow, was man¬ifest on Wednesday, when a large congregation, representative of Town, University and County, attended a memorial service held in the church of St. Mary and St. Michael, Trumpington. The service was a most impressive one, and will never be forgotten by those present. The chancel of the church was adorned with white chrysanthemums and ferns, whilst a cross of similar Mowers, which hung from the chancel rails, bore the inscription: "With most loving sympathy."

Buried under fall of chalk. An inquest was held on Monday on the body of a man named George Reed, 34 years of age, who was killed on Thursday whilst at work in a chalk pit at Royston. Deceased was spiking chalk, and suddenly a large piece, weighing some 15 cwts, fell from above, hitting the man on the head and knocking him down. A further fall of 30 to 40 tons took place, and buried the man, who, when extricated, was quite dead, with fearful injuries to his head. The jury returned a verdict of "Accidental death."

Long Career of Public Service, —The death of Mr. James Toller, (83) of Winfield, Waterbeach, occurred at his residence on Friday after a short illness. He had been indisposed for about three weeks, but it was not until about a week ago that he was compelled to keep to his bed. Mr. Toller was well-known in Cambridgeshire, and for 45 years was a familiar figure in Waterbeach. For practically the whole of his life he was in business as a farmer and corn merchant, and he also performed numerous public duties to the satisfaction of the district and to his own credit during a long period. He was one of the original members of the County Council, and by his death the County loses its only link with the first Cambridgeshire Council. He was also a member of the Chesterton Board of Guardians for considerably over 20 years. In the village he took an active part in local affairs. He was an original member of the Parish Council. Mr. Toller endeavoured to secure a seat in Parliament immediately after the introduction of the Home Rule Bill by Mr. Gladstone. He fought the Mid-Norfolk constituency in the Liberal interest and succeeded in considerably reducing his opponent's majority. In later years Mr. Toller was associated with the local Conservative and Unionist cause. For about 50 years he has been senior deacon of the Baptist Church, and was a generous supporter. He was a close friend of C. H. Spurgeon, who had often stayed at Mr. Toller's residence in Waterbeach. Mr. Toller's wife pre- deceased him, and two sons and two daughters are left.

It is the duty of vets to go round and examine wounded horses after a battle and those they find capable of bandaging or plugging up are taken to the rear and have their wounds attended to, while those too badly injured and put out of their pain – the officers carrying pistols for the purpose. There is a terrible wastage of horse life as there is of human life in a war and this is the most frightful campaign that has ever been wages. But the veterinary officers have saved an immense number of animals which were fit again after a short rest.

Cyril Wright of Chesterton Road, a motor cyclist attached to the 1st Cavalry Division writes to his mother: Christmas is getting nearer and the war has not ended yet. I don't think it will last very much longer because of the terrible slaughter going on. I was in a village when the Germans opened a heavy artillery barrage, blowing the houses up as if they were made of putty. I was completely cut off so ran into a trench and had to stop there ten hours. After dark I crawled out under heavy rifle fire to my motor cycle only to find it smothered with broken glass and bricks. I was glad to get out of if. 14 11 13

It is awful. The enemy are suffering heavy losses and General French says it will just be a matter of days to see it through. There is a change of being home for Christmas yet.

Paul Gilroy writes: one British regiment crept up to the enemy's advanced trenches and bayoneted the whole lot without arousing the trench behind them. They then quietly filled them in so that the Germans could not occupy them. One Ghurkha officer attacked another trench in the night and kukried the whole lot, about 150 in all. The terrified howls of the Germans were dreadful to hear – but the Ghurkhas killed them all, and came grinning back

Corp. H. Simpson of the 6th Division of the Royal Field Artillery who were in tents on Midsummer Common writes: When I was in Cambridge growling because we were kept in England I did not realise how terrible war was. I think that nearly a quarter of the men that were at Cambridge are either killed or wounded. People in Shelford and Stapleford are worried about mysterious lights shining on the Gogs and are concerned that there are spies. But Dr Henry Bond says the light came from his house. There is concrete in the foundations and the removal of the house might provide a base from which a German gun could demolish King's College chapel. He admits he speaks German and has had holidays there. But he is not a spy and honest folk are quite safe. However given the present alarm nobody who has electric light in his house, a bottle of German wine in his cellar, or worse of all (like our Royal Family) German blood in his veins, will be safe. 14 11 20 # c.45.5

There is no more potent cause of disease amongst soldiers than impure water. When Cambridge became a mobilisation centre and the Sixth Division was camped along the Cam from Jesus Lock to the Pike & Eel, Sims Woodhouse, the Prof of Pathology, took a bucketful of river water, from a spot where the soldiers were bathing and washing their clothes and by experiment turned it into perfectly pure and palatable drinking water. Even water polluted by corpses is made innocuous. It will be surprising if the whole army does not benefit by his research 14 11 20 # c.45.5 # c.36.9

The Germans had a great network of spies, County Councillors were told. The county should be purged of all spies or people of treasonable actions. The Emergency committees which were being formed should ensure people were not installing secret petrol stores for Zeppelins or watch for partisans with carrier pigeons or wireless apparatus. University Laboratories were doing much undisclosed research involving explosives and chemicals and employed a high proportion of aliens. A man who had watched army evolutions on Parker's Piece was pursued and arrested by two police constables after an old lady denounced him as a spy. Promoted. — Capt. George R. Bowes, of the Cambridgeshire Regiment has been promoted to the rank of Major, and Capt. D. Grafton Pryor has been appointed Adjutant. The appointments were announced in a supplement to the London Gazette, issued on Saturday night. R. V. Burrows and F. L. Death of Lord Roberts.—Field Marshal Earl Roberts passed away on Saturday evening, and the whole Empire mourns the loss of a great commander. Lord Roberts was in his 83rd year, and died as the result of a chill contracted while visiting the Indian troops at the front. Pneumonia super-vened. Cambridge University on June 3, 1893, conferred the honor¬ary degree of LL.D. on Lord Roberts. His visit to Cambridge on that occasion of the manoeuvres in the Eastern Counties (in 1912) is well remembered by residents. Lord Roberts was cordially received in the town.

The above is the text of a resolution which formed the subject of a good deal of discussion at a special meeting of the Cambs. County Council held at the County Hall on Saturday afternoon. There was some opposition to the motion which was eventually carried by a majority of 26 to 15. # c.45.5

Death of Mr. A. W. Rose.—The news of the death of Mr. Arthur William Rose, of Market Hill, and Peas Hill, Cambridge, was received with widespread regret on Tuesday by a large number of friends. Mr. Rose had suffered from heart trouble for a considerable time, but he had been able to attend to his business up to Wednesday of last week. On that day he was caught in a rainstorm and contracted a chill, from the effects of which he never recovered. Death ensued at 6.30 on Monday morning. Mr. Rose. was born at Cottenham on November 1, 1868. He entered into partnership with Mr. Lawrence about 20 years ago, and together they carried on the business of a butcher at 37, Market Hill, and 22 Peas Hill. The partnership lasted for about two years, and on the death of Mr. Lawrence the business passed into the possession of Mr. Rose. Open-hearted and generous, Mr. Rose made a wide circle of friends in Cambridge, and he was held in the greatest respect by local tradesmen. About 15 years ago he interested himself in the formation of a Butchers' Association in Cambridge, and he was one of the foundation members. For a considerable time he was treasurer of the Association. He was a sidesman of Great St. Mary's Church. Mr. Rose leaves a widow and one son.

There is urgent need for food and increasing shortage of labour as men enlist. Motor plough needed that is self-propelling and light so can be used for winter and summer ploughing. It is more economical than horse-drawn plough – can do same work at one-third of the cost. Price is within reach of farmer, can average five acres a day which would require five single ploughs each with team of three horses on heavy land – other figures – that’s five men compared with one for motor plough; and horses require grooming, housing & feeding. County council should buy one and rent to smaller farmers. They could also be used for haulage and pulling binders on the road. But they cost £350 and would become obsolete in five years. Horses were difficult to get and almost prohibitive in price. 14 11 27

Exning has furnished 120 men for the forces, 28% of the male population. Mr George Townsend has had the names inscribed and illuminated on vellum and framed in oak. It is entirely hand-painted and has taken the artist 260 hours of labour. The church is beautifully painted and true in every detail except the roof of the chancel is shown with red tiles. It contains the names of all Exning soldiers with their private address and the regiments they belong to.

The first VC of the war has been won by a Cambridge man, Sergt Papworth of 15th Hussars. His parents formerly lived at Chesterton and now live at Hayward's Heath. He was with a small troop of 10 men that suddenly came across a large force of 6-700 Germans. Undaunted by the fearful odds the Hussars retired in good order, inflicting severe losses on the enemy. The Hon. E.C. Hardinge was injured and Serg Parish remained behind and kept the Germans at bay while his officer reached a point of safety. Cambridge will be proud to learn that the gallantry of a local man has won the first VC of the war

New machinery installed at the Hundred Foot pumping station just beyond Pymore was formally opened. The new plant supplied by Gwynnes cost £3,000 with another £1,100 for work on the engine house. It is a high-pressure compound engine and a vast improvement on the old engine and scoop wheel. The fens had subsided and got so low for the old scoop wheel and it became impossible to grow potatoes. Decision hastened by the great flood of 1912 when water rose to the bands of the wheat shocks, potatoes and onions completely covered. . Had been pumping plant since 1829. In 1881 the scoopwheel was enlarged. Now had two good sets of pumping machinery, one at Ten Mile Bank

Fellowship for Dr. Rootham.-— Dr. Cyril Bradley Rootham, M.A., Mus.D., was on Friday ejected .to a Fellowship at St. John's College, Cambridge. Dr. Rootham, who is well-known as a musical composer, is organist at the College and Director of the University Musical Society. This is the first fellowship for music ever given by St. John's College, and we believe there are only two other instances in the University of Cambridge viz. Dr. Wood, of Gonville and Caius, and Mr. Dent, of King's College. At Oxford only one Fellowship has even been awarded for music, Dr. H. P. Allen being elected! a Fellow of New College. There are however, two Honorary Fellowships held by eminent musicians, Sir Hubert Parry and Sir Walter Parratt being Hon. Fellows of their respective colleges. Dr. Rootham is the University Lecturer on "Form and Analysis of Music"— the Lectureship founded last year by Mr. Sedley Taylor. The high honour conferred upon him by his college has been received with great satisfaction by his numerous friends. Dr. Rootham's compositions are very numerous and of great importance. He is an original thinker, and has the power of expressing his thoughts in a scholarly and artistic way # c.69

Athletes' Volunteer Force,—The Duxford Athletes' Volunteer Force which was formed on November17, held their first drill on Tuesday in a barn which has been lent by Mr. Hughes for the purpose. The following members were drilled by Drill Instructor Pearce. — Messrs. E. Hughes, W. G. Pike, A, Webb, T. Harding, C. G. Greaves W. Angell, A. W. Cullum, s. Woodley, F. Ward, S. Wilson, J. Plumb, T. Plumb and A. Proud.

Muffled Peal. — On Monday the church bells (at Dry Drayton) rang a muffled peal in memory of our brave soldiers and sailors who have so heroically lost their lives in the present war. The ringers were W. Blunt, J. Doggett, Harry Impey, F. Blunt and P. Williams. The village has responded fairly well to its country's call, but there are still a few strong healthy young men left who ought to enlist.

Growth.—A curious growth has taken place in the upper part of Dry Drayton during the last week. A number of toad-stools grew from the ceiling of a kitchen, there being about one dozen full-grown ones and some hundreds of young ones suspended from the plaster of the ceiling.

Effect of war on Cambridge

A deserter from the Liverpool Regiment has been arrested on a charge of bogus billeting at various villages. Dressed in khaki, he called at Gt Chesterford and said he was seeking billets for 3,000 troops. He found lodgings with a poor woman who took him in out of sympathy. He had bed supper and breakfast and then left, saying his superiors would pay his account. Nothing has since been heard of him. He then visited Newmarket where he saw the Vicar and made arrangement for the Church House rooms for the use of the troops. The rooms were cleared and made ready for the arrival of the soldiers, but none have arrived.

Pte George Ashley was greatly liked in his home village of Exning. Aged 30 and unmarried he had been a Reservist and gladly obeyed the mobilisation order. He had just finished his pipe sitting down in the trench when he put it away and saying 'Well I must do my duty' jumped up and looked out towards the German lines. Almost at the moment a bullet struck him. His hat fell back in the trench and Ashley fell beside it, quite dead. It was a hero's death, quick and painless, his parents were told.

Chance for Women Policemen. — It is not so long ago (writes Free Lance) since Lady Darwin suggested the appointment of one or two women policemen for the Borough of Cambridge, and if only part of what I hear is correct, there would be plenty of scope for the services of such an official in Cambridge Just now. Reports reach me of a most undesirable state of things existing after nightfall on Parker's Piece and other open spaces and it is suggested that clergy and ministers should take the matter up with a view to asking the military authorities whether it would not be possible to keep these places under keen surveillance at night. The Women's Franchise Association, too, now that they are experiencing a time of more or less inactivity, might with advantage, exercise their in¬fluence upon the young girls to be found in these spots at such un¬desirable hours.

Cat's Long Journey. — Mr. J. Charles, who until recently resided in this village (Oakington), moved a few weeks a so to Chelmsford, where he is employed by the G.E.R. Strange to say, the other day the he took with him his cat, and animal suddenly made its appear¬ance in its old home, having found its way back.

New Provincial Grand Master.— At the annual meeting of the Provincial Grand Lodge of the Cambridgeshire Freemasons, held at Wisbech Town Hall yester¬day, it was officially announced that the Grand Master of England had appointed the Rev. J. H. Gray as Provincial Grand Master of this Province, in succession to the late Colonel Caldwell, Master of Corpus Christi. The announcement was received with enthusiasm. The Rev. H. J. Gray has been Deputy Provincial Grand Master of Cambridgeshire for a number of years.

Bishop's Health.—Regret at the indisposition of the Bishop of Ely (Dr. F. H. Chase) will be general (says Free Lance), and His Lord¬ship now announces that he has been forbidden to undertake any public duties until after the end of the year. It will be remembered that he was taken ill at the con-clusion of the first day's proceedings at the Ely Diocesan Confer¬ence, and was unable to attend on the second day. This proved to be a slight attack of appendicitis. The Bishop has had a very arduous year, the re-modelling of the diocese and other matters throwing an exceptionally heavy burden upon his shoulders. It is to be hoped the New Year will see him com¬pletely restored to health once more.

Linton Postman's Six Bayonet Wounds.—A lady at Linton has re¬ceived a letter from Corporal C. Jaggard, a Linton postman attached to the 6th Inniskilling Dragoons, who is a prisoner of war lying seriously wounded in a German hospital. It appears that he was one of four who escaped out of a total of 40, all the others being killed. He received six bayonet wounds— two in the back, two in the neck, one in the chest, and one in the thumb. He also had his forefinger shattered. The corporal owes his life to a woollen trench helmet which he was wearing at the time. It prevented a bayonet thrust from going deep into his neck. He was lying two days before being picked up by the Germans. Later it was reported that his wounds were healing satisfactory, and he is pro¬gressing slowly.

P.C. Lander told the inquest he had been called to the yard of Mr Webb's blacksmith shop at Cherry Hinton where he found the body of a girl lying on the ground. There was a ring of iron, a cart tyre, resting across her neck. He lifted it off and tried artificial respiration in front of the fire at the Red Lion Hotel. The tyre had been lodged against the grindstone. Children knew they were not allowed there. There was probably no more risk at this place than at many others in the village.

But billeting would relieve the hardship of lodging house keepers now fewer undergraduates were studying at university.

In case of invasion
The term which has just ended has been described as perhaps the most wonderful on record. At the beginning some 1,800 men were up, of these abouit 500 joined the O.T.C. some 400 training for commissions but we may still expect between 1,200 and 1,500 men back after Christmas; then there are 183 Belgian students in residence & plenty more non-combatants may be expected

Trade & employment in Cambridge have not been hit by the war. But with nearly 600 students missing, colleges that are hardest hit will be unable to keep on all their servants. Twenty per cent of builders are now out of work. Many women are employed in the jam factory at Histon and in the two knitting factories where War Office order shave provided more work than usual. Women have obtained posts vacated by men clerks who have gone to war but a large number of day girls are out of work owning to the light of the lodging-house keepers. As these girls are in man cases the daughters of women who are themselves injured by the war, this state of affairs means a further depletion of an already scanty income. For good general servants there is a greater demand than supply, but there is very little demand for the services of any of the better class of servants and the number of between-maids out of employment is especially large. Hand laundresses have been very hard hit by the war. The great majority of these women are normally engaged in working for the colleges and, owing the the stoppages of games, the amount of washing sent per man is much less this term. When the woman is the chief breadwinner of the family their position is extremely serious. The laundresses themselves are not in such a bad plight, for many have made considerable sums during the busy six months of the yea and many of them have savings laid by. Buy only in very few cases have they got husbands in independent work. A large number of tailoresses are entirely unemployed and the remainder are working short time. Some have gone to Leeds to work making khaki uniforms and others will probably follow. The better class dressmakers seem more affected than the inferior ones Business is slack just now and is expected to be much worse after Christmas when business is usually slack. The dressmakers and milliners' hand employed in shops seem to be on short time. Here too the better class shops are worse hit than the cheapest establishments and several employees say they will be unable to keep their hands for a prolonged period without a considerable improvement, Shirt makers are busy at present but their usual work is almost entirely replaced by the making of shirts for officers' outfits and there is apprehension that at the end of this term this work will be to a large extent cease

Emergency committees have been appointed to act in concert with the military authorities in case of invasion. That for the Isle of Ely is headed by Mr C. Bidwell and includes Mr Luddington of Littleport, F. Harlock, of Ely A.E. Wright of Haddenham & Owen Ambrose of Stuntney. Their powers include the removal of livestock, vehicles and foodstuffs from the scene of operations and facilitating the passage of troops through the area. Every man should take his part in the struggle; if he is not employed in permanent work he should enlist or join the nearest Volunteer Corps; he will be provided with a badge and counted as a combatant though no arms, ammunition or clothing will be supplied. Anyone who declines to enlist must not take part in the defence of his country and incase of invasion must surrender any arms he has in his possession. He will be liable to duties such as digging trenches or burying the dead. The public should not carry arms on any account. This applies to some local gentlemen who have threatened to use arms in case of invasion: such steps would provoke reprisals on inhabitants and destruction of buildings.

Sinking of the Nurnberg.—Late on Wednesday night the British squadron, following up its brilliant success off the Falkland Islands— when three German cruisers were sunk after a bombardment— cap¬tured and sank the enemy war¬ship Nurnberg, which had steamed off when the German Squadron was defeated. British vessels are now in close pursuit of the Dres¬den, which was engaged in the battle. This morning, off the coast of Dover, two enemy submarines were sunk by the British Navy. The Mayor and Vice Chancellor had appealed to the War Office to send more troops. They could be billeted in lodging houses, two in the living room and two in the bedroom. As there would be no vacation they would be better off than they would be letting to University men. But troops would be billeted first on the outer parts of the town and work towards the centre to give some margin for emergency by having the central part to fall back on

Mr Stearn said that it was not troops that Cambridge required but something to take the place of gentlemen undergraduates. There were 'crack' regiments like the Honorable Artillery Company, sportsmen's brigades and gentlemen's brigades. Death of Lady Alice Newton. The death of Lady Alice Laura Sophia Newton, widow of the late George Onslow Newton, of Croxton Park, occurred at her Sussex home on Tuesday week. Lady Alice was a daughter of the eleventh Earl of Dundonald, and was 65 year of age. For some considerable time she had been an invalid. The funeral took place at Croxton on Friday, when the little parish church was filled by those resi¬dents of the district who came to pay a last tribute of affection. The body was conveyed by motor hearse from Sussex, and reached Croxton Church at 2.30 p.m. It was met by the Rector (the Rev.W. Symonds) and the choir. The hymn "Abide with me" was sung at the graveside. The body was interred in the family vault.

The thick mud at the bottom, however, clung to his feet, and he tripped over and disappeared also. His wife then rushed to his assistance. Nurse Boutle of South Street volunteered for foreign service with the Red Cross Society. She was taken prisoner in Brussels and sent to nurse wounded German and French soldiers. When the Germans refused to let them go she disguised herself and after a risky journey and an exciting incident with a German sentry – three minutes afterwards a man was shot at the same spot – she reached the coast. On the crossing the steamer passed two floating mines. She had no complaints about the conduct of the Germans who saluted nurses in the street.

The Red Lion public house at Trumpington was completely gutted but the landlord and his family escaped out of the bedroom window. Flames burst through every window and the inside was completely burnt out but the roof was hardly damaged. Very little commotion was caused in the village and people living in a cottage opposite were not aware of the fire until the following morning. The contents were completely destroyed, including £50 in notes of Slate Club money. But gold and silver were recovered from the ruins

St Ives Rifle Range accident, lad killed
Jane Pegg, wife of an Impington coal merchant, said she saw a man at Histon station wearing a blue overcoat similar to the greatcoats of the Belgian soldiers. He told he was from Hills Road Hospital; he'd been wounded at Liege where his father was killed by his side. Felling sorry, she'd given him a meal and invited him to stay for the weekend. But really he was a butcher from St Ives. The lad said he'd return to his mother and promise to be a good boy. But he was sent to prison with hard labour. 14 12 25

Billeting – where the military authorities take an empty room in a house, the amount paid is 3d per night per man. Where bed and attendance is provided this is 9d. The War Office will accept as a 'bed' a mattress on the floor, with bedclothes, so a householder can get the extra sixpence. For this he is expected to cook the men's rations – they can draw their meat ration twice a week and so get a decent joint. Corn Exchange requisitioned,

Territorial Battalions. East Anglian Territorial battalions are now being organised into four instead of eight companies, as is the case with regular battalions. Last year, before the war, it was officially notified that the four company organisations would not be extended to the Territorial infantry until the next individual training season, but it is considered that now is a most suitable time for making the change. Each company will be, as in the regular service, divided into four platoons, commanded respectively by a lieutenant and a senior non-commissioned officer of a company will be a Company Sergeant-Major instead of a Colour Sergeant. 15 01 15 CIP

German Aircraft Raid.—German aircraft made a raid on the East Coast on Tuesday evening and dropped bombs on Gt. Yarmouth. Sandringham, King's Lynn, Cromer and Sheringham. The accounts of the attacks vary in details, notably in regard to the number of people killed, but they agree on the main facts. The first attack would seem to have been made on Yarmouth at about half-past eight o'clock. It was too dark to discern the hostile craft, but nine bombs appear to have been dropped on the town and two people killed. A soldier was also injured, and several of the townspeople sustained wounds from broken glass. The damage to buildings does not seem to have been extensive. Subsequent raids were made on Sandringham and King's Lynn, and on Cromer and Sheringham, where bombs were dropped. Two people were killed at Lynn. The accounts in this case speak definitely of a Zeppelin. Whether the raids were made by the same aircraft cannot be said but a telegram from Amsterdam speaks of four German airships passing over the Dutch islands earlier in the day. 15 01 22 CIP # c.26.1 # c.45.5

Troops Inspected.—General Sir Ian Hamilton, on Wednesday inspected the troops quartered in Cambridge. Accompanied by General Bruce Hamilton and a number of staff officers, the Inspecting Officer took up a position in Gonville Place and the troops marched past the saluting base in column of route. Earlier in the day the men had marched by various routes, and on their return they concentrated in three columns on Hyde Park Corner and then marched down Gonville Place past General Sir Ian Hamilton. A large crowd assembled on Parker's Piece to witness the imposing military scene, and townspeople assembled in large numbers at other points of vantage 15 01 22 CIP

Cambridge Floods. A heavy downpour of rain experienced last week caused the River Cam to overflow its banks, and the low lands adjoining the river were extensively flooded. At Grantchester the road from the mill to Trumpington was submerged for a distance of about 400 yards on Friday and Saturday, the road being impassable except in a vehicle. The water rose very rapidly on Friday, Sheep's Green, Newnham and Coe Fen became impassable, whilst Chesterton Meadows became inundated the water encroaching halfway across the roadway at Water Street, Old Chesterton. The ferries below Victoria Bridge were unable to be worked during the weekend, but were able to resume on Monday. Although the commons were not flooded to anything like the extent they were following the blizzard towards the end of last month, large pools of water existed at places. At Jesus Sluice there was only a difference of about a foot between the levels of the water above and below the locks The river has now gone down, and is almost at its normal level 15 01 29 CIP, 15 01 29a

Death of Mr. H. B Wootten. - We regret to record the death from pneumonia of Mr. Horatio Bonnett Wootten, of the Shrubbery Whittlesford which occurred at his residence on Saturday afternoon, in his 61st year. Mr, Wootten had lived in Whittlesford since his marriage about 30 years ago. He was agent for Hudson's Brewery, and developed an ex-tensive business in the district. His generosity to those villagers who were unfortunately placed will be greatly missed. He was a great-hearted man of wide sympathies, but his beneficent actions were performed unostentatiously. He was a staunch Conservative and had worked enthusiastically for the cause throughout his residence in Whittlesford. A good all-round sportsman, he was particularly fond of hunting. Hor¬ticulture was one of his favourite pursuits, and he spent hours in his garden at the Shrubbery. He was estimator of crops for Cambridgeshire to the Board of Agriculture and Fisheries. 15 01 29 CIP

Hon. E. S. Montagu in the Cabinet. —Whether we had been living in the mist of a political truce or not, I should have felt bound (writes Free Lance) to have extended my congratulations to the Member for West Cambs. (Hon. E. S. Montagu) on his entrance into the Cabinet at the age of 35 (as Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster). Differ as not a few of us may from Mr. Montagu on many of the chief topics con¬cerning the country and the Empire, it behoves us in common fairness to recognise the astuteness of Mr. Montagu as a Parliamentarian. It is given to few men at such an early age to attain Cabinet rank. That Mr. Montagu has earned it from the point of view of his own party goes without ques¬tion when one bears in mind the spade work that he has put in as henchman both to the Prime Minister and the Chancellor of the Exchequer. His political friends may consider that his knowledge of finance, National Insurance and matters pertaining to the govern¬ment of our Indian Empire entitles him to be classed as one fully en¬titled to deal with such important matters as a Minister of the Crown 15 02 05 CIP

Death of Councillor H. J. Gray. We regret to record the death of Councillor Henry John Gray, which occurred at his residence, 'Roslyn' St. Barnabas Road, Cambridge, on Thursday. For some time Mr. Gray had suffered from an internal complaint and this recently became acute, and an operation was performed on Sunday. He made progress for a time but suffered a relapse from which he never rallied. The death of Mr. Gray will be deeply regretted by a wide circle of friends, and particularly by the older generation of sportsmen in the town. He was in his 79th year. In his younger days the deceased gentleman was an all-round athlete, and he won considerable renown in many classes of sport. He was born in Cambridge and in 1855 he started business on his own account, subsequently establishing the firm of H. J. Gray and Son, athletic outfitters. He was head of the firm until about 19 years ago. Mr. Gray was the oldest of five brothers. He held the Professional Racquets Championship from 1868 for several years, and he trained two of his brothers, who were also champions. Between the three brothers the Gray family retained the championship for 22 years. He was an exceptionally fine coach and established a famous racquet school. He was also a prominent local cricketer, and was a member of the Cambridgeshire team which played against All England in a match on Parker's Piece some years ago. In November 1894 Mr. H. J. Gray was elected Town Councillor for the Petersfield Ward, and since then he has done useful work on the Corporation and on some of its committees. 15 03 05 CIP # c.38

Cambs Regiment in Action. During the past week vivid stories have come to hand in the shape of letters from the men themselves, which give a pretty good idea of the fierce fighting the 1st Cambs. Regiment went through nearly a fortnight ago. By many it is stated that Regulars have admitted that the engagement concerned was worse than the retreat from Mons and under such circumstances a certain number of casualties must be expected. No official list of these is yet to hand, and the numbers in the various letters vary considerably. It is regrettable to have to record thus early after their departure for the Front the deaths of two promising young officers in Capt. O. N. Tebbutt, of Cambridge, and Lt. J. D, Smalley of Whittlesey. Capt. Tebbutt was the eldest son of Col. Louis Tebbutt, Station Road, the former Commanding Officer of the 1st Cambridgeshire's. Capt. Tebbutt was 24 years of age. 15 03 26 CIP

Stallion Show. The annual stallion show in connection with the Cambs. and Isle of Ely Agri¬cultural Society was held at Cambridge on Monday. As a result of the beautiful weather, the attendance was fairly good, better, in fact, than at the previous Cambridge show, although not so large as at Ely last year. On the whole, the show must be described as a fairly good one. A large number of breeders attended 15 03 26 CIP

No Competitive Cricket. The annual meeting of the Cambs. Cricket Association was held at the Castle Hotel. Cambridge, on Wednesday evening, when it was decided, on account of the war, not to run any of the Association's competitions during the coming season. The question of friendly games was left to the clubs themselves, an opinion being expressed that matches must be arranged for juniors under service age and for others ineligible for active service. 15 03 26 CIP

Cambridgeshire Regiment's First Knock. A letter received from Lt Col. C. K. F. Copeman, commanding the 1st Battalion of the Cambridgeshire Regiment by Mr. C. Adeane, Chairman. Cambridgeshire and Isle of Ely Territorial Force Association, conveys the first authentic information, as to the exact loss sustained by the Regiment in recent fighting in France. It says: "Many thanks for your letter of the 9th. Since receiving it, the Regiment has received a very serious knock. We were in the thick of the great fighting last Sunday, and I am proud to tell you that the Regiment did very well, so the General told me. It was an unexpected attack, and we were hurled into it in the midst of terrific shell and rifle fire, which lasted from 4.30 on Sunday to about 5 on Monday morning. I thought it impossible that we could escape without most terrible losses; as it is, they are bad enough—two officers killed, two sergeants reported missing, but, I fear, six men killed, 20 wounded and three missing. Bad and sad enough indeed for a first start, but had you been there you would have wondered it was not ten times more. I don't want a similar experience just yet. Two men are temporarily deranged, but will doubtless recover at home. The Regiment is now resting for six days about five miles from the firing line." 15 04 02 CIP

"Active Humbugs". Three passive resistors who still persist in their refusal to pay the educational portion of the Poor Rate, appeared at the Cambridge Borough Police Court on Wednesday summoned for the non-payment of the same, and received little sympathy from the Bench. The appearance of their names among the rate defaulters was the subject of strong magisterial com¬ment, the Mayor (Mr. W. L. Raynes) on one occasion remark¬ing: "Passive resisters are better described as 'active humbugs'." 15 04 02 CIP # c.36.5

Cost of Household Commodities. On inquiry, a Press representative was informed that the current prices of coal are 34s. per ton (kitchen) and 36s. per ton (house). These prices have now been pre¬vailing for some time. At the Corn Exchange on Saturday there was much wheat on offer, and the prices quoted were about late rates. Bread remains at 8d. per quartern loaf. Best butter is 1s. 5d. per lb. and eggs are 10 a shilling. 15 04 02 CIP

Premises destroyed. Considerable damage was done in the early hours of Sunday morning by a fire which broke out at the builder's premises of Mr. H. E. Ambrose, in Gwydir Street (Cambridge). A daughter of Mr. G. F. Harrison, coach builder of Gwydir Street, informed her father that fire had broken out in the builder's yard and premises, and Mr. Harrison promptly gave the alarm. The outbreak occurred in the paint shop, and on the arrival of the police, they discovered that the fire was blazing furiously, and had gained a strong hold. Residents in the vicinity were aroused and the firemen speedily got to work from two hydrants. An excellent pressure of water was available, but it was about an hour before the firemen had the outbreak under control, A joiner's shop, a carpenter's shed and tools and fowl sheds, as well as Mr, Harrison's premises, where the fire originated, were destroyed. The damage is estimated at £2.000, and is only partly covered by insurance. About 20 firemen were on duty, in addition to police. 15 04 30 CIP

Retirement of Mr. Denison-Pender, M.P. Considerable surprise and regret will be expressed at the news of the impending retirement from Parliament of Mr. J. C. Denison-Pender, the Member for East Cambridgeshire. We understand that a short time ago Mr. Denison-Pender carne to the conclusion that on purely personal grounds he would be unable to continue his political connection with the Division, This news was conveyed to the Executive of the East Cambridgeshire Conservative and Unionist Association and several meetings have been held. Efforts were made to induce Mr. Denison-Pender to reconsider the matter, but he was, unfortunately, unable to alter his decision. It is under¬stood that Mr. Denison-Pender will retain the seat during the existence of the present Parlia¬ment. It is hoped an announcement with regard to a new Conservative candidate will be possible in the near future. 15 04 30 CIP

Cambridge and the Military. For a few days past (writes Free Lance) Cambridge has been practically denuded of troops and the "emptiness" of the town after their departure could not fail to strike us all. With no military and no undergraduates, the town bears a deserted appearance, indeed for Easter Term, and on all hands the hope is expressed for the speedy arrival of another batch of troops. It speaks well for the behaviour of the men that the residents generally should regret their going, and look forward to the reception of another division. Tradespeople have, of course, benefited considerably by their presence, and are trusting to see a number continuously in the town, in order to counteract the loss of trade which will be the outcome of the abandonment of the May races. 15 05 07 CIP

River Fatality. A sad fatality occurred at Cambridge on Wednesday afternoon, when a little boy named Douglas William Ward, aged 4, son of Police Constable William Ward, 29, Beche Road, Cambridge, was drowned in the River Cam. It appears that the little chap was playing near the bottom of Priory Road with a younger child named Flack, aged about 2½ years. Just how he came to get into the water nobody knows, but it is thought he must have descended the steps leading to the water and fell in. 15 05 07 CIP

Vicar Instituted. The institution and induction of the new Vicar of Madingley (the Rev. J. E. Stodart) took place at Madingley Church on Wednesday afternoon before a large congregation. The ceremony was performed by the Bishop of Ely, and among others present were the Venerable Archdeacon Cunningham, the Rural Dean and other clergy. The living is in the gift of the Bishop of Ely, who appointed Mr. Stodart in January last. At that time, Mr. Stodart was chaplain at Alassio, in Italy, and he could not leave the chaplaincy until after Easter. Mr. Stodart succeeds Canon Doxat, who was at Mading¬ley for 11 years, and who has retired into private life at Malvern. Canon Doxat was much respected by the villagers, and on the occasion of his leaving he was presented with an address which expressed to him the affection of the people, and the gratitude they felt for his services. 15 05 07 CIP

Heavy Losses. We understand that the Cambridgeshire Regiment has recently been in some heavy fighting in France and evidence of this is seen from the fact that of the officers who went out with the regiment, only two or three remain at the front, including Major Saint and Major G. L. Archer. The casualties among the rank and file has also been severe within the last few weeks, and we learn on good authority, which we are prepared to take as absolutely trustworthy, that in a recent engagement, out of three platoons, only 30 men re¬turned unscathed. In a letter, a Wisbech private said: "I am sorry to say that the poor old Cambridgeshires are only now about 500 strong, instead of 1,000 when landing in France". 15 05 14 CIP

Barrington Squire Killed. A gloom was cast over Barrington on Saturday night, when the villagers received intimation of the death in action of the Squire - Brevet Lt.-Col. Richard Nelson Bendyshe, of the Royal Marine Light Infantry. Although Col. Bendyshe has never actually resided in Barrington the family is probably the oldest in the County, and the Bendyshes from time immemorial have been in¬timately associated with all matters pertaining to the welfare of the village. Col. Bendyshe succeeded to the large estates in Barrington and the district in September of last year on the death of his uncle, the Rev. Richard Bendyshe, at an advanced age. Mrs. Bendyshe and her daughter have only recently come to reside at the Hall. Col. Bendyshe retired from the Marines on July 1 1910 and was appointed to the Reserve of Officers. On the outbreak of the present war, Col, Bendyshe was called to the service of his country and served in the 12th Battalion, Marine Brigade, Royal Naval Division. Cambs. and the War. Messages from the Front received during the last few days speak of the Cambridgeshires as being well in health and full of spirit, in spite of their hard gruelling of late. The casualties have, unfortunately been very heavy but the morale of those still serving with the regiment "somewhere in France" is magnificent. The men have cheerfully done their duty in the trenches and have won golden opinions for their splendid behaviour under fire. Cambridge people will be particularly pleased to hear that Major E. T. Saint, who is still with the troops, is safe and in good health. His letters home are full of praise for the magnificent conduct of his men. Major G. D. Archer, of Ely, is at present, in command of the regiment. News has been received by Mrs. Naylor of 102, Russell Street, Cambridge, that her youngest son, Pte. Master of Downing. It is with regret we record the death of the Master of Downing, Prof. Frederick Howard Marsh which occurred at the Lodge, Downing College, on Thursday morning. The news was received with profound sorrow by members of the University and townsfolk alike, for Professor Howard Marsh was held in the highest esteem throughout the University, town and county. The professor won eminence as a surgeon and his reputation was world-wide. He had been Professor of Surgery in the University of Cambridge since 1903. He was elected Master of Downing in 1907 and his loss will be keenly felt by the Foundation. Only those who were intimately associated with the late Master can fully appreciate the extent of the work he did for the College and estimate its value. Before he was elected Master of Downing, Prof Howard Marsh was a Professorial Fellow of King's College. He was a member of King's at the time of his death. Apart from his University labour - and his duties were heavy - Prof. Howard Marsh found time in which to devote himself to local affairs. He evinced the greatest interest in matters pertaining to the welfare of the town of Cambridge, and for many years he had been a zealous worker on the Cambridge Town Council. The Boy Scout movement received his wholehearted and cordial support, and as District Commissioner he was ever among the various Boy Scout units locally, aiding them with his friendly advice and ever ready with a help¬ful word. He was born in 1839. 15 06 25 CIP

Frost Damage. Considerable damage was done in the Cambridge district during Friday night and the early morning of Saturday by a sharp frost. From observations made at the Botanic Gardens, the lowest temperature four feet from the ground during Friday night was 44.9 degrees, On the ground the temperature was -29.9 degrees, or rather more than two degrees of frost. The principal damage was sustained by market gardeners and allotment holders and in conversation with several of the latter at Chesterton this week, a reporter was told that potatoes have suffered severely. The effects of the frost are most discouraging to the large number of working men who devote their spare time to the cultivation of potatoes and vegetables for their own tables. In the Cherry Hinton district gardeners suffered rather severely. Potatoes and beans were blackened and cut down to a great extent but so far as can be ascertained the effects of the frost were not felt so severely in the Cottenham district. Potatoes and beans suffered in some instances, but damage was not general. Ice was formed at Hauxton. The frost will have disastrous effects in the districts where the wheat is on blossom. The prospects of the wheat yield were about the average, but it is not possible to gauge the extent of the damage by the frost. Little, if any effect will be caused to the fruit by the frosts, as the produce is too far advanced. 15 06 25 CIP

Interference with Recruiting. The smart sentence (three months hard labour) passed upon a man at Cambridge this week for influencing young men not to join the Forces of the Crown will be pronounced ay the general public as quite just. It should act as a warning to those ne'er-do-wells who, too indolent and unpatriotic to offer their services for their country, hang about street corners and endeavour to dissuade other willing loyalists from doing their duty. A more dastardly or cowardly action at the present time it is difficult to imagine and anyone indulging in such practices may be sure of but little leniency at the hands of the magistrates if brought to book.15 07 02 CIP

Munitions Work. The Ministry of Munitions has sanctioned the organisation of a small munitions factory in the Cambridge district. An opportunity is thus afforded Cambridge people to assist in the production of munitions of war, and it is a well-known fact that a large number of local men have recently expressed a desire to take part in this most important work. In many instances these men are already engaged in skilled and necessary work at. Cambridge, and they feel that they cannot give their entire time to munitions work. The opportunity thus afforded them to give of their leisure time to the manufacture of war munitions in Cambridge has accordingly been warmly received 15 07 02 CIP

Youthful Recipient of D.C.M. Lance-Corporal Laurence A. Austin of "A" Company 1st Cambs Regiment has been awarded the D.C.M. for gallant conduct in the field. Lance-Corporal Austin was with many others of the Cambridgeshire Regiment attached to the Leinster Regiment when a certain position was heavily attacked by the Germans. Full details are lacking, all that is known is that he was recommended for the medal by the Colonel of the Leinster Regiment himself. Lance Corporal Austin, who is not yet 18 years of age, is probably the youngest recipient in the British Army of the coveted medal. His parents reside at 8 Rathmore Road, Cambridge. 15 07 02 CIP

Famous Cyclist. Considerable regret has been occasioned in Cambridge, and especially in athletic circles, at the news that Mr. R. L. Player, 2nd Australian Infantry Brigade, one of the most brilliant of East Anglian amateur cyclists, has been killed in action. It was a little over ten months ago, to the very great regret of a large circle of friends, he left Cambridge and sailed to Australia. Soon after arrival there he joined the 2nd Infantry Brigade, in which he was serving at the Dardanelles when he fell. Player was for some time captain of the Cambridge Town and County Cycling Club. He won several N.C.U. championships, broke records and won several trophies. 1915 07 09 CIP

A Novel Occurrence. On Monday evening, a party of bathers in the Brook (at Bourn) noticed a large animal disporting itself on the bank and diving into the water. After pursuit, it was eventually shot by Mr. F. Crow. It proved to be a large, well-developed male otter in splendid condition, weighing 11½ lbs and measuring 40' inches from the tip of its nose to the tip of its tail. It was a most unusual visitor to this neighbourhood, an otter never having been known to have been taken here before. If the creature found its way up from the Cam at Byron's Pool, it must have made a journey of over ten miles. 15 07 09 CIP # c.19

Death of Captain R.E. Sindall. It is with deep regret that we record the death of Captain R. E. Sindall, of the 1st Cambridgeshire Regiment, which occurred on July 2. Captain Sindall sustained severe injuries through the bursting of a shell in the trenches on June 26, and from the time of his admission to the Clearing Station the surgeons regarded his condi¬tion as very grave. Capt. Sindall was 26 years of age and was the second son of Mr. and Mrs, W. Sindall of The Elms, Great Shelford. Captain Sindall was educated at the Perse School, Cambridge. With the Colours. Free Lance, referring to a letter from Mr. C. K. V. Adeane, Chairman of the County Territorial Association, giving figures relating to local recruitment to the forces, says: "We get an approximate estimate of 11,000 Cambridgeshire men serving with the colours, viz, 8,197 from the County and Isle and 2,777 from the Borough. A glance at the table (quoted in the letter) shows how many parts which have not nearly come up to scratch, and where there must be hundreds of men still content to remain at home when they should be taking their places beside their fellow countrymen on the training ground or in the trenches. The parish figuring best in the percentage column is Madingley, which, with 20 out of 83, comes out with 22.4 and Girton, Pampisford, Sawston and Cheveley, all top the 21 per cent, but of these 1 think Sawston shows up to the best advantage, having sent 166 out of a total male population of 789. Out of a total of 18, Shingay can boast four with the colours, which gives the place a percent¬age of 22.2. Barton and Conington are other villages to have done exceedingly well. Ely can boast of having sent the largest actual number, 753 having gone out of a male population of 3,909, which gives the excellent percentage for a place of this size of 19.2 15 07 16 CIP

Presentation. The departure this week of the Rev. H. R. Church officials and members of the congregation generally bade Mr. Whitehead an official goodbye on Monday evening, when they assembled in the boys' schoolroom, and a presentation of a cheque for £21 was made by the Vicar (the Rev. Hird) on their behalf, to the departing gentleman. The Rev. H. R. Whitehead is leaving St. Luke's to take up an appointment at Wellington College Mission at Walworth. 15 07 16 CIP

Appointment of a Headmistress. I must confess to a good deal of sympathy (writes Free Lance) with the remarks of those councillors who, at yesterday's Town Council meeting, expressed disapproval of the Education Committee's action in passing over local talent in appointing a new headmistress. If there had been a lack of suitable applicants from Cambridge one could have understood the Committee looking elsewhere for a lady to fill the post, but no such circumstances existed. They had an opportunity of accepting the services of one who had held the post of headmistress for 20 years, and whose credentials were of the highest order. Regiment's Departure. The 3/1st Cambridgeshire Regiment had an enthusiastic send-off on Wednesday morning, when they left Cambridge en route for a beautiful park situated "somewhere in England," where they are now encamped for field training. The Battalion, which is about 700 strong, has been practically raised and trained in Cambridge. The men have made rapid and almost wonderful progress, both in regard to their physical fitness and all their drills. In every sense of the word they are a credit to the town and county which have reared them. As they marched along on Wednesday morning with a fine swinging stride, upright and manly, they looked a picture of health and happiness. No wonder people cheered. The departure of the Battalion from Cambridge must, of course, mean a considerable financial loss to the town - a loss of probably over £1,000 a week which the town can ill-afford. The men have been billeted in the Borough, and their departure has left Cambridge with hardly any troops at all. 15 08 27 CIP

Trumpington's Roll of Honour. In the presence of a crowded congregation, the Vicar of Trumpington (the Rev. Dr. R, G, Bury) unveiled in the parish church of S.S. Mary and Michael, Trumpington, on Sunday afternoon, the village roll of honour. The names of 69 Trumpington men are in¬scribed on the roll which has been erected near the west door of the church to perpetuate the memory of the men of Trumpington who "went over in the Great War of 1914-15 to defend the honour of England and to preserve unscathed for future generations the great inheritance of British justice and British liberty." 15 09 03 CIP

Fires at Cambridge. The Fire Brigade received three calls to borough fires during the past week. In the early hours of Wednesday morning they were called to a serious outbreak in Fitzroy Street, and on the following day they were called upon to pay two visits to the London and North-Western Railway, where an engine shed had caught fire. Only the alertness of a police constable prevented something in the nature of a catastrophe in Fitzroy Street. Three business premises were involved in the outbreak. The fire, it appears, originated in a shed, situated at the rear of Messrs Peak's stores and used as a warehouse for the storage of empty boxes. The large quantity of wood caused the flames to ascend to a great height, and set fire to the middle room of Messrs. Peaks' stores. The flames then appear to have travelled along a beam over Mr. E. Rouse's premises and joining the stores on the New Square side. Considerable damage was done to both shops, both by the fire and the water. Premises occupied by Mr. Waller were also damaged, the staircase being badly charred and the roof ruined in one place. 15 09 03 CIP # c.34.75 # c.26.2

Presentation to Vicar. A large-number of parishioners and friends assembled in the schoolroom on Monday evening to bid farewell to the Rev. W. A. Sir John Briscoe presided and in the name of the subscribers, presented Mr. Baker with a silver revolving breakfast dish engraved with a suitable inscription, together with a purse of money. The children of the Sunday School presented him with a travelling suitcase, and Mrs. Baker was the recipient of a pretty and useful handbag. 15 09 03 CIP

Notable Hebrew Scholar. We regret to announce the death, which took place at a nursing home in London on Friday of the Rev. Dr. Annesley Williams Streane, Fellow of Corpus Christi College and formerly Vicar of Grantchester. He was 70. A Hebrew scholar of great repute, the late Dr. Streane produced a large amount of work, his chief publications being an edition of Jeremiah and Lamentations, a translation with notes of the treatise Chagigah from the Babylonian Talmud and the Double Text from Jeremiah. His parishioners found him an earnest and kind-hearted parish priest, and in college, as Dean of Corpus (for 12 years) he treated the undergraduates with even-handed justice. He was Hebrew and Divinity Lecturer at Corpus 1875-97 and 1906 and was Senior Proctor in 1891-2. He took the degree of Doctor of Divinity 20 years ago 15 09 17 CIP

Increase in Food Prices. According to an article appearing in the "Board of Trade Labour Gazette", retail prices in the United Kingdom advanced about one per cent, during the month of August, the articles which showed marked increases being bacon, butter, fish and eggs. In the case of eggs the movement was seasonal. As compared with a year ago the general level of prices showed an increase of about 23 per cent. Taking all articles together and making allowance for their relative importance in working-class households, the average increase in food prices may be put at about 35 per cent. The latest available data concerning food prices in Berlin show that after a sharp rise in the first month of the war, prices declined somewhat last September, but from that month moved steadily upward until July, in which month they reached a figure representing an increase of nearly 70 per cent, on the prices of July 1914. In Vienna, taking food prices in July, 1914, as equal to 100, the index number in July this year was 178.6 15 09 17 CIP

Death of Dr. R. Assheton.The death took place at Grantchester on Saturday from heart failure, following influenza, of Dr. Richard Assheton, D.Sc., F.R.S., lecturer in Animal Embryology at Cambridge University since 1911. Dr. Assheton was 51. He had done a good deal of research work and was one of the few remaining embryologists in England. He was the greatest living authority on the early stages of mammalia development and on the foetal membranes of mammals. He was an extensive contributor to scientific literature and published the results of his research work in books and papers. The death of Dr. Assheton will be keenly felt throughout the parish of Grantchester. He was greatly interested in the wellbeing of the district and acted as chairman of the parish council. He was one of the managers of Grantchester Schools and was the chairman of the Town Lands Trust. For the past six years he has been one of the churchwardens of the parish church of St. Mary and St Andrew. 15 10 27 CIP

Bart.) was solemnised at St. Peter's Church Babraham on Thursday last. The service was largely attended by county people, great interest being centred on the happy event. It was a military wedding. The bride's father, besides being the Lord Lieutenant of the County, is the chairman of the Cambs. and Isle of Ely Territorial Force Association, and has as such, perhaps, done more than any other man to obtain such a splendid rally of Cambridgeshire men to the Flag, whilst Mrs. Adeane is the President of the County branch of the British Bed Cross Society. The bridegroom, who joined the 60th Rifles in August, 1914, went to the Front in the following November. He was educated at Eton and Oxford, played cricket for Eton in 1910 and 1911 and was captain of the Eton eleven in 1912. 15 10 27 CIP

Fireman's Narrow Escape. A mysterious outbreak of fire in the boilerhouse and blacksmith's of the Stourbridge Brick Co. Newmarket Road (Cambridge) on Thursday evening resulted in injury to a fireman and the total destruction of a large portion of the premises concerned. So far as can be ascertained, no one was working on the premises after 5 p.m, and the outbreak was discovered by the foreman Mr James Ingle, at 7,30 p.m. The Fire Brigade were telephoned and when they arrived with the motor escape and tender, the flames had got a grip on the buildings. Shortly after, the engine arrived. The roofs of the blacksmith's shop and the boilerhouse were burnt off and practically the whole of the contents of the building destroyed. Fireman Papworth, of the Cambridge Fire Brigade had a narrow escape. On entering a burning room, he fell into a deep pit, but fortunately sustained only slight bruises. The premises, we understand, were not insured. 15 10 11 CIP # c.23

County Wedding. The marriage was solemnised at Trumpington Parish Church on Thursday afternoon between Mr. Wm. Warburton Wingate, of Scroope House, Cambridge, and Miss Viola Patience Campbell Pemberton, only daughter of Canon and Mrs. Pemberton of Trumpington Hall. Great interest centred in the happy event, and in addition to the congregation in the church, which was crowded, a large crowd of well-wishers lined the approaches and also gathered outside on the road. A canopy had been erected from the south door of the church to the highway, and this was lined on either side by inhabitants of the village and many people who had journeyed, over from Cambridge. The bride, who was given away by her father, was charmingly attired in a gown of ivory soft wove satin and ninon, the corsage being arranged in fichu effect with Brussels lace hung from the shoulders, and she wore a long tulle veil. She was attended by four bridesmaids. The officialising clergy were the Very Rev. the Dean of St. Paul's, The Rev. Austin le Strange (Rector of Ringstead, Norfolk), and the Vicar of Trumpington (the Rev. R. G. Bury. Litt.D.) The Trumpington Church choir was present. 15 11 24 CIP

Histon Hero. A local man, Frederick Carpenter, of Histon, who left Messrs. Chivers factory to join Kitcheners' Army only a few months ago, has had a thrilling experience while on his way back to England, wounded. He received his wound at Loos, and after being in hospital at the base, was put on board the Anglia. He was lying in bed at the time the ship struck a mine, the first intimation being a terrific explosion. Carpenter got up and went on deck, where, as he explains, an awful sight greeted him. The ship was sinking fast, but within five minutes a destroyer came to the rescue and was alongside. A nurse tried to get Carpenter on board, but he gallantly took her up and threw her on to the deck of the destroyer. Two badly wounded men he also rescued and put overboard on to the destroyer. Then he was unable to save himself by the same means, for the destroyer had to move away from the wreck. Carpenter now helped to lower the only boat and in doing so he broke an arm. He had a lifebelt, but bravely handed this over to a man with only one leg, and got on to the stern of the boat which was high, in the air. Then he fell into the water, only just missing the whirling propellers of the sinking vessel. With one arm he swam for half an hour until at last he was picked up by a destroyer and reached England safely. Carpenter is now suffering from the broken arm and a bad chest, but his wound is better. 15 11 24 CIP

V.C. Hero. Although the wedding was to have taken place without much ostentation last Thursday, the news of a V.C. getting married at St. Botolph's Church (Cambridge) quickly circulated and there was not only a large congregation to witness the ceremony, but a crowd assembled at the church doors to see the bridal pair leave. The bridegroom was Lt. James E, Leach, V.C., of the 2nd Manchester Regt, son of Mr. Leach of Leicester and the bride was Miss Gladys M. Digby, daughter of Mr, William Digby, of Queens' Cottages, Cambridge. The bride was given away by her father, while Lt, Turner, of the Royal Fusiliers, was best man. The congregation included many other officers and men. The service was choral. 15 12 23 CIP # c.45.5

Thrilling Experiences. The Rev. David Howard (a son of the Rev. C. Howard, Vicar of St. Phillip's, Cambridge) was on the steamer "The City of Marseilles" on its way to India as a missionary when it was attacked by an enemy submarine. Mr. Howard and another missionary were walking on the deck when they observed the conning tower of a submarine. The captain warned them to keep down below and as they went a shot from the submarine went over the vessel. The submarine fired seven shots and the gun, excellently manned by two gunners, replied with, eight. The submarine then submerged and was seen no more. During this time the passengers had gathered together and adjusted their lifebelts, prepared for the worst. The Army Chaplain (the Rev. Mortimer) conducted a short service, during which the hymn "Jesu, Lover of my Soul" and all three verses of the National Anthem were sung. By the time the service was over the danger had passed and another service — this time of thanksgiving — was held in the saloon. The crew, from the captain downwards, were afterwards rewarded by the passengers with handsome sums for the manner and way they had acted during the danger. 15 12 23 CIP

Major's D.S.O. — Major Percy Hudson of the King's Liverpool Regiment has been awarded the D.S.O. He is the youngest son of the late Mr. P. L. Hudson. His distinction has been gained "for consistent good work, gallantry and devotion to duty, both as adjutant of his Battalion till March, 1915, and subsequently as Staff Captain, 6th Infantry Brigade. He was wounded at Ypres on October 24, but refused to leave his Battalion. During the attack on October 26, 1914, he showed great gallantry and devotion to duty by the manner in which, though wounded, he re-organised two companies when all their officers had either been killed or wounded. Bt.-Major Hudson has on several occasions performed 'acts of courage, initiative and leading which had a direct influence upon operations'. Major Hudson went out to the Front in August, 1914, with the Aldershot Command as an Adjutant of the 1st King's Liverpool Regiment. He has been wounded three times and three times mentioned in dispatches. He is at present Deputy-Assistant Adjutant-General and Quartermaster General of the 4th Division. He served in the South African War, going out as lieutenant in the old Cambridge Volunteer Company of the Suffolk Regiment. He has been through all the big battles in France with the exception of Neuve Chappelle, at the time of which he was in hospital.

50 years at King's College Chapel. On. Monday next, February 14, Mr Walter Poole Littlechild, Chapel Clerk at King's College, Cambridge, will attain his jubilee as a servant of that royal and religious foundation. The completion of: such a long period of continuous service with one employer would, in any connection, be an interesting event, but it is doubly so in the case of Mr Littlechild, who, owing to the personal prominence given to him by his official attendance at the services at the "cathedral" of Cambridge, is known far and wide, even to the confines of Empire and beyond

Closing Cambridge prison. One of the most astonishing results of the war—perhaps the most astonishing—is the effect it has, had on crime (says the writer of Town and Country Topics). This matter has been commented upon at every Assize and Quarter Sessions for the last twelve months or so. The calendars have been so light as to cause astonishment. Serious crime seems almost to have come to an end, and the presentation to the Chairmen of Quarter Sessions of white gloves as evidence of there being no prisoners for trial has become quite a common occurrence. As a consequence of this change in our normal conditions, some of His Majesty's prisons have hardly any prisoners, in them, and as a wartime economy, it is proposed to close some of them for the time being. Four or five of them have already been shut up in different parts of the country, and we understand that the prison at Cambridge is to be added to the number closed during the period of the war. It is a remarkable proposition, although we should kike to that that we could get along without a prison in our midst. 16 02 09 # c.34.9

A fortunate escape. The fortunate escape of the Norwich and London express on Monday afternoon (says the writer of Town and County topics) when the engine was derailed after charging a fallen signal-post which obstructed the line near Ely, recalled the more serious accident to a similar train many years ago, through a balance weight falling in front of it from off the engine of a down express train. Then some passengers were very seriously injured and the train rendered almost a total wreck. The heavier engine which was drawing Monday's train, and the prompt action of the engine-driver appear to have been the main causes of preventing a repetition of the distressing results of the earlier accident. Everybody may be congratulated that matters were not worse than they were.

Soldiers in the Workhouse. The Cambridge public (says the service writer) were very much shocked by the report made at the last meeting of the Cambridge Board of Guardians that three soldiers recently discharged, from the Army had been admitted to the casual ward within the previous fortnight, and the greater public outside the Borough has since manifested a good deal of interest in the case. It is a lamentable thing that the Workhouse should become the abode of so many old soldiers towards the close of their lives, and the country is quite right in endeavouring at this time to break the neck of such a bad system. We shall be ingrates indeed if we let the men who have engaged in this great war for world liberty end their days as paupers, if any effort of the community can save them from that fate. # c.45.5 # c.32.9

Shortage of Labour. Although the advent of ladies to positions which had formerly been occupied by men has not become very general locally, yet several posts are being filled temporarily by members of the fair sex (according to a Histon paragraph). The chief place where this is noticeable is the G.E.R. goods office, where two lady clerks are now employed.

Protection against raids,—There are signs (says the writer of Town and Country Topics) that the matter of our protection against Zeppelin raids is being taken up much more seriously than was the case until quite recently. Cambridge has had its scare, and that has stimulated action. Our protest against supineness has been emphasised by our townsmen hearing the sounds of exploding bombs by night, and the increased stringency of the light restrictions, and the heavy fines imposed by transgressors by the Borough magistrates show that we have arrived at a realisation that we are not immune, or, at any rate, that it is wisest to lock the stable door betimes. A walk through Cambridge on an average evening reveals, however, that a good deal still remains to be done, and we believe the present temper of authority is such that it will see to the doing of it. We hope it may be so, for we think experience has proved beyond question that darkness is the best safeguard against attack. We believe also that Cambridge is about to follow the example of other East Anglian towns, and issue more particular instructions to persons as to what to do, and what to avoid doing, should we be so unfortunate as to find ourselves being bombed. That is another step in the right direction, and one which will be appreciated by all good citizens. Perhaps now we shall hear no more taunts of scare-mongering hurled at those who have felt it their duty to offer warnings # c.45.5

Miraculous Escape. Among the passengers on the P and O liner Maloja which was mined between Folkestone and Dover on Sunday morning and went down with a loss of about 150 lives was Miss Lily Dockerill daughter of Mr. Walter Dockerill, Little Shelford. Miss Dockerill had a marvellous escape and her parents were greatly relieved on Tuesday to hear of her safety. She was on her way to Bombay to be married and among her luggage, which has been entirely lost was the whole of her wedding trousseau and presents.

Regulation of Lights - To avoid any unpleasantness (says a Histon paragraph) the special constables wish to draw particularly the attention of householders, shopkeepers and all others whom it may concern to the fact that the strictest attention must be given to lights in their homes, etc. Dark blinds are not sufficient to meet the requirements of the Act. All blinds must be shaded with some dark material (green for preference) and no crevices may show at the top, bottom or sides. Red Blinds with no shading are not sufficient. If these regulations are not carried out the defaulters will only have them-selves to blame if trouble is brought upon their shoulders. In the case of hostile aircraft approaching the county all motor cars, motor cycles, pedal cycles and carts will be stopped and the drivers ordered to put out their front white lights and get on the side of the road and remain there until the danger is past. The rear red light must not be extinguished and they must not travel without lights. Further all lights in houses and buildings which cannot be absolutely darkened must be extinguished. # c.45.5

Sudden Death of Schoolmistress. On Wednesday last the villagers of Cottenham and Histon were shocked to hear that Miss Florence Todd, assistant mistress at the Cottenham County School, had died under somewhat tragic circumstances, being found dead in bed at her sister's house at Histon. The deceased (a native of Cottenham) had made her home with her married sister and brother-in-law (Mr. and Mrs. Albert Todd). Deceased was also attached to the nursing staff at "The Firs" Red Cross Hospital at Histon. She was apparently in her usual good health and bright and cheerful spirits when she retired to bed on Tuesday night. She slept with her niece, who, upon waking, was startled to find her aunt cold and looking very pale. She rushed into her mother's bedroom and exclaimed that her Aunt Florrie was very cold and looked funny in the face. She was found to be dead. Upon Dr. C. H. Cox, of Cottenham, and Dr. L. Davis, of Histon, conferring, it was deemed unnecessary to hold an inquest. Deceased was 40 years of age.

Local Man Wounded. Mr. Octavius Moore has received a letter from his son, Pte. Herbert E. Moore, stating that Pte. Charles Papworth, of his regiment, has been wounded. It appears that the company were constructing some wire entanglements one night when Pte Papworth was shot, presumably by a sniper. We are glad, however, to say that the letter says the wound is not of a serious nature.

Summer Shows. The Cambridgeshire Agricultural Society has no doubt come to a wise decision (says the writer of Town and Country Topics) in abandoning its summer show. The condition of the labour market by next July may be such as to render it very undesirable that there should be even the mild disturbance which the holding of a show might occasion. But we are disposed to question equal wisdom of local horticultural societies abandoning their exhibitions, and especially those which are chiefly supported by cottage gardeners and allotment holders. There was a great demand at the beginning of the war that the land should be made to increase and multiply to a previously unrealised extent the production of foodstuffs, and especially vegetables. We have not heard much of this outcry of late, although, with the threatened stoppage of importations, we should have thought that the need of such cultivation was more urgent today than a year ago. Competition undoubtedly stimulates the amateur gardener to do his best, and we hope that the managers of the various industrial horticultural societies will carefully consider the local situation: and the bearing of their action upon it before deciding not to hold; their shows this year. 16 03 08

The Jolly Anglers was a fully licensed house, situated at Waterbeach Fen, about a mile from Upware and three-and-a-half miles from Bottisham Lock. The registered owners were Messrs A. & B. Hall of Ely. The house had been closed for trade since February 10th, 1915. The previous tenant had been there from 1892-1907 but was now doing his duty to the country by making munitions. He went away in February with the hope that he would return. The brewery had, public-spiritedly, not filled the vacancy. It was a house that did a good trade in normal times, being much-used by anglers. But the angling and river traffic was not so much because of the war.The population of Waterbeach was 1,430 and there were 12 licensed houses, being one every 119 inhabitants. There was not another house nearer on the river than the Green Man at Bottisham Locks. The magistrates decided to refer the house to the Compensation Authority.– 16 03 15c

Farm Fire. A serious outbreak of fire occurred at King's Hedges, near Milton, on Wednesday evening on a farm in the occupation of three smallholders, Messrs. Hawkes, Curtis and Tuffin. The fire was first observed shortly before nine o'clock, and before the flames were got under control great damage had been done to the outhouses, all of which were practically burnt, whilst a pony and two pigs were also destroyed. A good deal of concern was felt in Cambridge, the reflection of the flames in the sky being plainly seen from the town. Helpers from Histon and Milton and a party of soldiers, led by an officer who had noticed the glare in the sky, rendered valuable assistance in fighting the flames, whilst the County Police, under the direction of the Deputy Chief Constable (.Supt. Webb), also afforded valuable aid. The house and several stacks and a good deal of livestock were thus saved. The loss, we understand, was covered by insurance.

Prolific. A sow belonging to Mr. Fred Negus, of Duxford, has a litter of pigs, 21 in number, all alive. Two are being brought up by hand. This is a most unusual number to keep alive, and very useful now in view of the price of pork.

Death of Ald. W. P. Spalding. We regret to have to record the death of Alderman William Potter Spalding, J.P., which took place on Tuesday morning in the midst of his family, in his 69th year. He was the eldest son of a printer, stationer and bookseller, Mr. William Spalding (Ipswich), and was apprenticed to his father. He started business in Cambridge on his own account in Sidney Street, Cambridge, in 1873. This prospered and was enlarged in many ways, and in 1881 he became a member of the Cambridge Town Council, proving an expert debater and administrator. Mr. Spalding was elected to the aldermanic bench and in 1908 was chosen Mayor in succession to his friend, Mr. H. G. Whibley. He had been appointed a J.P. in 1897. During 35 years of faithful public service, Ald. Spalding left his mark in many ways upon the affairs of the borough. # c.35.7 # c.25

March blizzards. Following two delightful spring days, another extraordinary spell of rough wintry weather set in at Cambridge on Monday evening. The wind, which had been boisterous during the day, developed into a heavy gale, accompanied by snow. A good deal of damage was done to telegraph and telephone wires in various parts of the county, and communication with London and other parts was interrupted. Telegraph posts on the Trumpington Road, Shelford Road and Huntingdon Road were blown down, whilst on the Histon Road were blown down just beyond Cambridge. Several trees were uprooted and. the mail cart from Cambridge to St. Ives was delayed for a time owing to obstructions on the road. On Tuesday morning the ground was covered with snow. Trains were late owing to wires being down. Rain set in during the day, but towards the close of the afternoon this turned to snow. The wind, too, increased in violence until it was blowing quite a hurricane. Huge trees gave way before the violence of the wind, chimney pots and slates came crashing down, whilst many fences collapsed. The Corporation workmen had to be called out to assist m clearing away fallen trees, and to assist the police in warning vehicles. Several pedestrians had narrow escapes. Among the many trees which fell was the famous plane tree in the Catholic Rectory grounds, which has been visited by arboriculturists from all over the world. # c.12 # c.18

Knocked down by Express. On Monday, a railway employee, Sidney Frederick Lofts, aged 19, of Thoday Street, Cambridge, was engaged in shunting operations on the G.E.R. at Barnwell Junction when he was knocked down by an up express. The down express train had just passed, and this Lofts had noticed approaching. In avoiding it, however, he did not notice the other train. A motor ambulance was telephoned for and obtained from the military hospital, the man being taken to Addenbrooke's Hospital. Here it was found necessary to amputate both legs. We were informed at the hospital, last (Tuesday) night that Lofts was going on as well as could be expected. # c.26.2

Cattle Buried Under Debris. At Fulbourn last week, a blizzard played havoc all over Fulbourn. The Manor Walk Wall was demolished by large trees which were uprooted, stopping traffic. About 200 trees were uprooted in the Manor grounds, and also one in Mr. Wright's one at Mr. F. J. Chaplin's, five at Mrs. B. J. Chaplin's', 14 in one field of Mr. Wright's, 21 beautiful fir trees in the grounds of Mr. John Gardiner, and the orchard at the Baker's Arms is completely wrecked, a great loss to Mrs. Giddens, as all were fruit trees. At Mr. H. E. Brown's farm, a shed 84 feet long, with 14 head of cattle, including five new-born calves with the cows, was blown from its foundation, and the whole of the cattle were buried under the debris. The extraordinary thing is that none of them was seriously hurt. After moving all the debris it was found that about 12 fowls were killed. One calf has since died from shock.

Shelford Damage. The great blizzard last week did an immense amount of damage in the village of Great Shelford, and neighbourhood. A number of trees were blown down. The drains had been blocked consequently the road in Sunnett's Lane has been impassable for a considerable distance, and many gardens have also been flooded. In Little Shelford over 100 trees have been laid low. The road from Whittlesford through Little Shelford was blocked by a large elm tree that stood in the garden of King's Farm. It fell across the road, obstructing the traffic. The road between the two bridges was also rendered impassable by trees, the walls and fences being damaged. In Stapleford a number of trees were blown down; one fell on the school house, knocking in the window. A large arm of a tree belonging to Mr. Linton, Stapleford House, fell on the telegraph wires, breaking them through.

Rate Defaulters. The Borough Justices had a large number of rate defaulters before them on Wednesday and Thursday many of whom were lodging-house keepers and others affected by the war. Extension of time was granted in many cases under the Courts Emergency Act, and orders made for payment by instalments spread over the next six months.

Leaving Histon. Another well-known resident is shortly expected to leave the village (Histon) in the person of Mr. H. J. Pratt. Mr Pratt came to Histon about seven years ago, and has since been a teacher at the Histon School. He leaves the district for Boston, near Peterborough, upon which appointment he is to be heartily congratulated. He will, however, be greatly missed in the locality, as he was connected with several local organisations. He is a prominent member of the Institute, and was on the General Committee, the Library Committee and the Games Committee. He was chess champion for 1915. He takes up his new engagement immediately after Easter, and leaves with the best wishes of his many friends.

Cambridge Chairman. The members of the East Anglian branch of the Auctioneers' Estate Agents' Institute of United Kingdom met, at Cambridge on Thursday for the purpose of holding their eighth annual meeting. The branch by a unanimous vote, elected Mr. R. T. V. Catling of Cambridge their chairman for the ensuing year

Late Master of Trinity Hall. Cambridge will greatly miss Mr. E. A, Beck, the late Master of Trinity Hall. He was a "gem" among University dons, possessing an irrepressible fund of humour, which could burst forth on all occasions, and it was a thing to be remembered when at some solemn meeting or other of grave University dignitaries he could crack a quite unexpected and most apposite joke, and watch the efforts to suppress the responsive smile. Mr. Beck, however, was never undignified, although towards the end of a long degree ceremony, the most trying of functions, his appearance did remind one strongly of the merry monarch who maintained three fiddlers. He had the kindliest heart, and was adored by the young men of his college, who, however, frequently tried him to the utmost.

More Postal Restrictions—With a view to economy, the Postmaster-General has decided that, except in the largest towns, the number of deliveries of letters per day is to be restricted to two. We are informed by Mr. A. Bell, the Cambridge Postmaster, that this would take effect in Cambridge as from Monday, May 1, when the number of deliveries will be reduced from three, as at present to two. # c.27.7

Grave Situation in Ireland.—In the House of Commons yesterday afternoon, Mr. Birrell stated: About noon yesterday grave disturbances broke out in Dublin. The Post Office was forcibly taken possession of. Soldiers arrived from the Curragh, and the situation is now well in hand. About 12 lives were lost. Telegraphic communications were difficult. He was unable to give further particulars, Lowestoft Bombarded.—Yesterday afternoon the Secretary to the Admiralty made the following announcement: About 4.30 this morning a German battle cruiser squadron, accompanied by light cruisers and destroyers, appeared off Lowestoft. The local naval forces engaged it, and in 20 minutes it returned to Germany, chased by our light cruisers and destroyers. On shore, two men, one woman and a child were killed. The material damage seems to have been insignificant. So far as is known at present, two British cruisers and a destroyer were hit. None was sunk.

East Coast Zeppelin Raid. Yesterday the War Office issued the following: Three Zeppelins are reported to have come in from seawards over the Eastern Counties last night. Two crossed the coast of Norfolk shortly after half-past ten, and another followed at about 11 o'clock. A few incendiary bombs have been dropped up to the time of issue of this communiqué. Later in the day the following announcement was made: Last night's air raid on the Norfolk and Suffolk coasts appears to have been carried out by four Zeppelins, only two of which made any serious attempt to penetrate, inland. About 70 bombs appear to have been dropped. One man is reported seriouslyinjured. No further details as to casualties are yet available in Cambridge

Rookeries. The rookeries in Cambridge have been a good deal upset by the recent gales. Trees, which for generations have yearly been occupied by rooks, have been blown down, and some of the college grounds most frequented by them are now almost deserted, the silence being I most remarkable to those accustomed to the "cawing" of the sable birds. This is particularly noticeable at St. John's, formerly one of the most favourable nesting centres, and generally at the Backs there are fewer nests than usual. # c.18 # c.19

Military Wedding. Great interest centred in the wedding at the Wesley Church, Christ's Pieces, Cambridge, on Saturday between Miss Lucy Irene Lavender; eldest daughter of Councillor and Mrs. G. H. Lavender, of 84 Chesterton Road. Cambridge, and Mr. Charles Arthur Shrubbs, 2nd Lieut., A.S.C.. son of Mr. A. Shrubbs, of Hinxton. The church was filled by friends of the bride and the bride's parents, who are well-known and highly respected in the town. The bridegroom is a Downing man, and was at one time in the University O.T.C. The officiating clergy were the Rev. R. Winboult Harding and the Rev-Dr. T. A. Barber, Headmaster of The Leys School. The service was choral. Afterwards a reception was held in the library of Wesley Church. The honeymoon is being spent on the South Coast.

New Parliamentary Candidate. Some time ago (said a special report) we announced that Mr. J. C. Denison-Pender did not intend to offer himself for re-election as the Member for East Cambridgeshire, and on Saturday the Conservative and Unionist Association adopted Mr. W. Foot Mitchell as the prospective candidate to contest the seat whenever an election may occur. Mr. Foot Mitchell, who resides at Quendon Hall, Newport, Essex, only a few miles outside the borders of East Cambridgeshire, attended the meeting and delivered a speech which must be admired for its frankness and outspokenness. At the same time, it stamps him as a gentleman of sound business acumen and training and his references to topics of the hour prove that he is not a party hack.

Fire. Yesterday (Tuesday) morning a fire was discovered at about two o'clock in the Church Charity Cottages (Pampisford) by a special constable. Before the flames were extinguished three cottages were almost completely destroyed, only the chimneys being left standing.

Sequel to Milton Feast. At Cambs Divisional Bench on Saturday, a Biggleswade man was summoned for selling cigarettes to a boy under the age of 16 years at Milton on May 9. Evidence was given by the boy, who said his age was 13. He stated that defendant was in charge of a stall at Milton Feast. There was a board at the back of the stall to which cigarette packets were fastened. By throwing darts, sold at two a penny and transfixing the packets they might be won. He won 10 packets but did not smoke any of the cigarettes. A constable said he saw defendant and told him that cigarettes must not be sold to boys under 16. Ten other boys, whose ages ranged from seven to 13, were seen smoking in the village. Defendant said he thought the boys took the cigarettes home to their fathers. The magistrates imposed a fine of 10s.

Bad Potatoes. At the Quarterly meeting of the Cambridge Town Council, Ald. P. H. Young drew attention to the remarks of the Commissioners of the Board of Control contained in the annual report of the Fulbourn Asylum Visitors respecting the potatoes served as part of the patients' dinner. The potatoes, it was stated, were cooked in the stew in their "jackets" and no attempt had been made to detect and discard bad ones. Many were absolutely black and uneatable and there was no margin to permit bad ones being replaced by good ones. Still worse, they saw, in one ward a mincing machine, into which unpeeled potatoes, good and bad, were indiscriminately placed and passed through the machine, so that the compound produced and served out was quite unfit for consumption. Ald. Young said he did not think this should be passed over without some explanation. Dr. Dalton said he did not wish in any way to justify the Visitors in this matter, but the report related to July 5 which was about the worst time of the year for potatoes. The Visitors, as soon as the matter was brought to their notice, had the matter remedied and had taken steps to see that it did not occur again.

Tailors Busy. We understand that' the result of the agitation carried; on some months ago to secure work, for Cambridge has been the placing of a large order for officers' uniforms with Cambridge tailors. The initiative was taken by the Cambridge Master 'Tailors' Association, who are to be congratulated on the success of their efforts. We hear an order for at least 800 uniforms has been distributed between the tailors of the town. No doubt a little difficulty is being experienced in getting labour at the present time, so many tailors having long since patriotically responded to the call. # c.45.5 # c.27

Pte George Casey was killed, while his comrade, Pte Alfred Reynolds, had part of an arm and part of a leg blown off, and died five minutes after he had been taken into the casualty clearing hospital.

D.C.M. Presented. — Home on leave from the battlefields of France, Corporal Ernest Day of the 1/1st Battalion, Cambridgeshire Regiment, who was awarded the Distinguished Conduct Medal for conspicuous gallantry and devotion to duty, attended the headquarters of the Territorial Association, East Road, on Wednesday last, when the Lord Lieutenant (Ald. C. R. Adeane), King's representative in the Bounty, pinned the medal on the gallant corporal's breast, and offered him the warmest congratulations on the honour ;so bravely won. The extract from Army orders relating to his act read.—"He crawled to the German trenches and did useful reconnoitring work, and after his patrol had been discovered, volunteered in an attempt to rescue a wounded officer who was lying near the German lines. He made three attempts, but without success, and during the whole time he exhibited the greatest bravery, and was subject to heavy machine-gun and rifle fire from the enemy's trenches".

Lord Kitchener Drowned. Yesterday afternoon the following message was issued by the Press Bureau. The Secretary to the Admiralty announces that the following telegram has been received from the Commander-in-Chief of the Grand Fleet at 10.30 this morning: I have to announce with deep regret that His Majesty's ship Hampshire (Captain Herbert) with Lord Kitchener and his staff on board, was sunk last night about 8 p.m. to the west of the Orkneys, either by a mine or torpedo. Four boats were seen by observers on shore to leave the ship. The wind was blowing W.N.W., and a heavy sea was running. Patrol vessels and destroyers at once proceeded to the spot, and parties were sent along to search, but only some bodies and capsized boats had been found up to the present. As the whole shore has been searched from the seaward, I greatly fear there is little hope of there being any survivors. No report has yet been received from the search parties on shore. H.M.S. Hampshire was on her way to Russia. The news was received with greatest sorrow throughout the country, and in Cambridge there was evidence of profound grief. The Guildhall flag was flown at half-mast. On board ship, among others, were Sir H. F. Donaldson, brother of the late Master of Magdalene, Dr. S. A. Donaldson. # c.45.5

Congratulations. At a meeting of the County Territorial Association, held on Saturday last, the following resolution was passed unanimously.—The County Association wishes to congratulate Col. G. L. Archer on his recovery from the wound he received in the trenches. It regrets to hear of the heavy casualties recently suffered by the Cambridgeshire Regiment, arid wishes to express through him its high appreciation of the gallantry always shown by the officers, N.C.O.'s and men of the 1/lst Cambridgeshire Regiment. A resolution was also passed congratulating Pte F. Drage, 1/lst Cambridgeshire Regiment, upon the honour conferred upon him on being awarded the Military Cross.

Cottage struck by lightning. A cottage in Bell Road, Bottisham, was considerably damaged by lightning during a storm last week. The gable end was wrecked and the lightning appears to have passed through the floor and across the downstairs room. In the room, Mrs. G. Hiner and Mrs. A. Brown, her daughter, were sitting, and the lightning passed between the two without injuring either — a remarkable escape. Considerable damage was done to the furniture in the bedroom. A singular thing was that the occurrence took place on the same day as the sad news was received of: the loss of Lord Kitchener, and a picture of the Secretary for War, which was hanging on the wall of the downstairs room, was split by the lightning.

Scout Medal. Scout Frank Keepin, Patrol Leader, Balsham, was recently awarded a medal of merit for gallantry in stopping a pair-horse wagon on the A.S.C., which was dashing unattended down the street, several children being in the way. The medal was presented at a meeting of the Cambridge Association by Professor Stanley Gardiner, District Commissioner.

County Heroes—We are indebted to the Chief Constable of Cambridgeshire (Lieut. Col. Alan Chichester) for the following list of casualties among Cambridgeshire men since the commencement of the war. As pointed out by Col Chichester, in an accompanying letter, the heavy casualties should bring home to all the seriousness or the conflict and the need for men. It is well to remember in considering the list, that it applies only to the Administrative County of Cambridge, and not to the Borough or the Isle of Ely. The total casualties amount to 835 of whom 222 had been killed and 30 had died of wounds. # c.45.5

Milton Man's Noble Death. The death occurred in France between June 2 and 5 of Pte. Walter John Froment, third son of Mr. and Mrs. J. Froment, of Milton. The deceased soldier, who met his death in a noble fashion - for he fell while dressing a fallen comrade's wounds - went to Canada in 1913. He joined the Medical section of the 2nd C.M.R. Police Dogs. A question of some interest was raised at last Thursday's meeting of the Cambridge Town Council, when Coun. A. R. Hills sought information respecting four items in an account for the keep of dogs. These items totalled £7 14s., and were "for the keep of dogs for three months." The Town Clerk said certain members of the police force were paid so much per week for keeping certain police dogs. He believed there were four dogs and they were kept by the policemen living in outlying parts of the town. Replying to a member, the Town Clerk said the dogs were Airedales, and came from Major Richardson. Mr. Hill inquired if they were pets. The Town Clerk explained the dogs were used for police purposes at night. Mr. W. W. Rouse Ball pointed out that these were specially trained dogs. The police constables who had care of them reported that the dogs were extremely useful. They were only used in the outlying parts of the town, and gave warning to the police if anyone was skulking behind hedges, etc. They were not in any way pets, but trained dogs, which enabled a smaller force of police to do the work.16 06 28 # c.19 # c.34.7

Visit of Viscount French. Field Marshal Viscount French, Commander-in-Chief of the Home Forces, visited Cambridge on Wednesday. He and his party drove from the station to Parker's Piece, where Lord French inspected the Cambridgeshire Territorials from the Administrative centre, Cambridge; the Cambridge University Training Corps and the 2nd and 5th Battalion Officer Cadet Corps. Many hundreds of inhabitants had assembled to witness the event, and a roar of cheering greeted the Field Marshal's appearance. He was received with the General Salute, and when he inspected the Cambridgeshire Territorials, he told them they belonged to a regiment in which he took the utmost interest, as he had the honour of being their Colonel. He had watched the behaviour of the 1/1st Battalion in France, and had been proud of his connection with the regiment whenever he had heard of the good work and brilliant actions they had performed in France. Before leaving, Lord French congratulated the officers and instructors on the splendid appearance of the men on parade, and said that great credit was due to them for the men's appearance, steadiness and marching (the recruits had been at the Administrative : Centre, Cambridgeshire Regiment Drill Hall, East Road, for periods varying between a few days and five weeks). The troops later formed in column and left Parker's Piece for the University Arms entrance, Lord French taking the salute. Subsequently he was entertained to dinner by the Mayor (Mr. G. Turner) at the Lion Hotel. Later he addressed a meeting at the Guildhall. # c.45.5

Histon Feast Sunday. That there was a smaller attendance than in previous years at the Histon Parade held on Feast Sunday was not a matter to be wondered at, so many Histon and Impington lads- husbands, fathers, sweethearts - having voluntarily answered the call and come forward to take their part in the titanic struggle being waged on the Continent. There was hardly a man of military age to be seen on Sunday, but the older people, and the younger, too, gave ungrudgingly in response to this annual appeal on behalf of Addenbrooke's Hospital. The parade was well organised and the officials deserve heartiest congratulation on the success of the efforts.

Big Push Casualties. -This week there was a long list of casualties or local men to record, a. not unexpected result of the Big Push, which is now progressing so satisfactorily. Large numbers of wounded have arrived at the First Eastern Hospital—as many as 460 reached Cambridge in two days— and a number of medical officers have left the hospital for service at, a daughter hospital in Egypt. # c.45.5

Hero's Father—John Cornwall, H.MS. Chester's boy hero, who stood at his post, though mortally wounded, was a member of a Cambridgeshire family. His father is a native of Bottisham Lode and is at present fighting in France. He wears the South African medal and the Egyptian Star and medal.

Golden Wedding. The following appeared in the "Sydney Morning Herald" (N.S.W.) on May 2; "Golden Wedding. — Preston-Looker. May 1, 1886, at St Mary's, Comberton, Cambridgeshire, England, by the Rev. Drew; Harvey Preston of Cambridge, England, to Lydia, third daughter of the late Mr. Edward Looker, Manor Farm, Comberton. Present address, Airlie, Herbert Street, Summer Hill."

Good News—The directors of the Gas Company give notice this week of a reduction in the price of gas, to take effect after the readings of meters for the quarter ending Midsummer, 1916. The new charge is to be 2s l0d per 1,000 cubic feet, which is a reduction on the present price of 2d. The price of gas, it will be remembered, was advanced as from Midsummer, 1915, from 2s 7d to 3s per 1,000 cubic feet, the cause of the advance being the high price of coal.

Another Heavy List Of Casualties. - Many additional casualties - the price which must be paid for all great victories - among Cambs. men at the Front, has come to hand during the past week. Mingled, however, with the expression of deep sympathy with the relatives of those who have fallen and the earnest hope for the recovery of the wounded, is a feeling of great pride in our gallant county lads and their valiant conduct in the Great Push. Fearlessly "and in a storm of shell, rifle bullets and machine gun bullets" to use the words of one of them - the lads of Cambridgeshire leaped out of their trenches when the word was given in the early hours of the morning of July 1. Many fell, but "most of the boys got there and gloriously did they acquit themselves". Town and county have cause to be proud of the part played by their sons on this memorable July morning. And before then, too, and since. In addition to the local casualties published last week, further casualties include five killed in action (including Capt. the. Hon. Roland E. Phillips, Royal Fusiliers, only surviving son of Lord St. Davids), six died of wounds, one missing believed killed, four missing, including Capt. G. W. Deighton, son of Dr. Deighton, of Hills Road, Cambridge and over 40 wounded.

New Theatre's Coming Of Age. Our musical and dramatic correspondent, "Onlooker," writes: The 21st annual meeting of the shareholders of the New Theatre Co, Ltd. will be held on Friday next, and it is gratifying to note that at the "coming of age" gathering of the company, the veteran managing director (Mr. W. B. Redfern) will be able to present a highly satisfactory balance sheet. Twenty-one years of theatrical enterprise will, naturally, to a very great degree, reflect the history of the town during this period and incidentally go a long way to prove the fact that consistent and well-directed effort invariably succeeds.

Stationmaster Honoured. – All Cambridge will join in extending heartiest congratulations to Mr. A. Peacocke, the new stationmaster at Cambridge, upon the honour conferred upon him by His Majesty the King, who has graciously awarded him the Royal Victorian Medal in recognition of long and faithful personal service rendered during the period he was travelling inspector in charge of the Royal train on the G.E.R's system. Although Mr. Peacocke only took over the duties of stationmaster at Cambridge at the beginning of the present month, he was well-known in the town, having, up to two years ago, resided in Mill Road for upwards of 15 years. The presentation was made at Buckingham Palace last Friday.

Heroic Officer. Cambridge has sustained some heavy losses during the present month, and prominent among them has been the death, through wounds, of Captain Robert W. Michell, R.A.M.C., better known to Cambridge people as Dr. Michell, he having been in practice here for some years, occupying premises in Trinity Street, nearly opposite Caius College, of which he was a member. An accomplished oarsman, he was in much request as a rowing coach. Every afternoon during Term he was to be met down the river advising either the crews of his own college or others, for Dr. Michell was always ready to give instruction to those who wished for it. He possessed a charming personality and was extremely popular with everyone who frequented the riverside. His death occurred in a private nursing home in London on Wednesday last from wounds received at the Front on July 3. Capt. Michell was wounded whilst performing an act of great gallantry, for which, we understand, he had been recommended the Victoria Cross. 16 07 26 # c.45.5

Dog's Tea. A certain person was having tea in the garden (at Eversden) when an aeroplane attracted her attention. When she returned it was to find a neighbour's dog had run off with the contents of her plate.

An Unpleasant Visitor. A somewhat unusual visitor put in an appearance at the house of Miss E. Chivers, of Cottenham Road, Histon, on Friday afternoon in the form of a snake. It was over three feet long, and appears to have been in the house for some time before it was noticed and its discovery caused a mild sensation in the house. It was, however, ejected before any damage was done.

Runaway Horse. Female workers from Chivers' fruit farms in a lorry had an alarming experience corning through Milton on Monday evening. The horse bolted and went about a mile before being pulled up. A Mrs. Benstead, of Horningsea, who jumped off the lorry and sustained rather severe injuries, was unconscious for some time. Mr. Scriven, who was passing, took her in his sidecar to Dr. Robson's, where she received attention and was conveyed home.

Plucky Rescue, — A very commendable act was performed by Mr. S. J. Dunn, of Aylestone Road, Cambridge last week. A young child, named Dora Clark, whose parents live in De Freville Avenue, was playing on the river bank when she fell into the water. Hearing cries for help, Mr. Dunn, who was in the neighbourhood, ran to the spot, and at once plunged in to the rescue. He succeeded in reaching the child, and brought her safely to the bank, losing his pocket book, eyeglasses and fountain, pen while in the water.

Another Son Lost. — Mrs. Chapman of Shelford, has received news that he son, Pte. A. Chapman (Suffolk Regiment) has been killed in action. This is the second son Mrs. Chapman, has lost during the war, and a third son is reported missing.

General Closing Order Suggested - A very large number of shopkeepers have expressed a wish that a general closing order should be made compelling all shops to close at 1 p.m. on Thursdays, states Mr. J. H. Phillips, Inspector in the Borough of Cambridge, under the Shops Acts, in the course of his annual report. He adds: "In the opinion of many, of those who are responsible for the Acts being carried out, considerable amendment is required. A committee of the Incorporated Society of Inspectors of Weights and Measures has given the matter very careful consideration, and drawn up suggested amendments, which have been filed until after the war or until a more favourable legislative outlook presents itself.

Pathos. — Considerable pathos attaches to the death of Pte. W. Brand, of Sawston (Suffolk Regt,). He was killed in action (in France) on July 7, and the bullet which ended his life perforated a photograph of his two children which he carried with him.

King's private tour. His Majesty the King crowded a good deal into a short stay at Cambridge last Thursday. The visit being of a private character, there was little public demonstration of any sort. Few townspeople apparently knew the King was coming, and fewer still were aware of the time of his arrival. The objects of His Majesty's Visit, were to inspect the various military units in the town and to visit the 1st Eastern General Hospital, where so many of his : brave soldiers, wounded in the recent fighting, are being nursed back to health. His Majesty evinced the keenest interest in everything he saw at the hospital, and stayed for a moment or so by the side of many a wounded hero, with a thoughtful inquiry as to progress and with a wish for recovery. The King's stay in Cambridge lasted exactly 2 ¾ hours. His Majesty was in khaki, and looked fit and well. 16 08 09 # c.45.4 # c.02

The Newmarket Rural District Fire Brigade (under Foreman R. Captured German Plane. There arrived in Cambridge on Thursday last a captured German aeroplane of the Albatross type, the gift of the Government to the University. When the aeroplane is erected it is to be housed in the Engineering Laboratories. Just at the moment, however, the staff is too busy to take this work in hand. It is hoped to have it in its place in the laboratories in October, when we believe it is intended to make a small charge at first to view this interesting trophy of the war, for the benefit of the Red Cross, or some other war funds, the machine, of course, is to remain in Cambridge as the property of the university. All the parts are here and the machine appears to be in good condition. # c.45.5 # c.26.1

Mill Road Cemetery, — A few weeks ago (says the writer of Town and Country topics) we called attention to the lamentable condition of a considerable part of the Mill Road Cemetery. We have abstained so far from further comment in the hope that it might be rendered unnecessary by some attempt being made to effect an improvement, but as nothing whatever has been done, we must point out that the part referred to is under the jurisdiction of the parish of Christ Church. The present state of things must have escaped the observation of the persons concerned. The whole area is a howling wilderness with grass reaching to a tall man's waist and we cannot think that the parish is content to let things bide as they are. We appreciate the labour and other difficulties which have to be encountered at this time and we are prepared to make reasonable allowances, but the present state of things in the Christ Church portion of Mill Road Cemetery is past all excuse. # c.21.2

Death of Major A. J. Pell. The death occurred suddenly on Monday at Tattenham, near Chester, where he was officiating as instructor of musketry, of Major Albert Julian Pell, J.P., of Wilburton Manor. Major Pell had a long record of public service in the County and the Isle of Ely, in which he had resided since 1891. At the time of his death he was holding the office of chairman of the Isle of Ely Quarter Sessions, vice-chairman of the County Council of the Isle of Ely, chairman of the Fulbourn Asylum Visitors, chairman of the Haddenham Level Commissioners, chair of the Grunty Fen Drainage Committee, chairman of the General Committee of the Governors of Addenbrooke's Hospital, vice-chairman of the Territorial Force Association, a Deputy Lieutenant of the County and Lord of the Manor of Wilburton. He was High Sheriff in 1909. He was called to the Bar of Lincoln's Inn in 1890.

New Catholic Church at Royston. Between 400 and 500 people attended the ceremony on Saturday of the blessing of the foundation stone of the new Catholic Church at Royston, which is being erected on the Melbourn Road. The ceremony was an interesting and impressive one and one that has not been witnessed since the 12th century, about which time the Priory Church was built. The new church, which .is cruciform in design, is being built in the Renaissance style and is situate in the Park Paddock, on the Melbourn Road. The Park House and grounds and the adjoining house and residence have been acquired and are being adapted as a convent. The Sisters of Providence, who have been in the town about four years, use the Park House as an educational establishment and another Close Order of Sisters will be in the house in the adjoining grounds. The ceremony of the blessing of the stone was performed in brilliant weather by Cardinal Bourne.

Jolly Tars. Although a very large number of local men have joined up with the Forces since the war, very few appear to have become sailors. Recently, however, two local (Histon) lads have become "jolly tars". The first is Bert Diver, who not long: ago left the village, and is now on his first voyage, his ship being bound for the West Indies. The other "tar" is Bert Sneesby, who left on Tuesday last. Although not a native of Histon, he has lived in the village for a considerable time and was employed as a clerk at Messrs. Chivers.

Accident. A serious accident occurred to George Benstead, a (Great Shelford) lad of six years. He was walking beside a wagon in Mr. Wright's field and stumbled and .fell, the wheel passing over his arm, breaking it in three places. He also hurt his ankle, the shoe being torn off his foot. Dr Magoris was called in, and sent the boy to Addenbrooke's Hospital, where he is progressing slowly.

Killed in action. Capt. J. V. Byrne-Johnson has been killed in action. Coming from Charterhouse to Clare College, Cambridge where he took his B.A., he became secretary of the University Athletic Club. He developed into a first class long-distance runner, and created a surprise in 1914 by doing the three miles in 14 min. 54-4.5 sec, beating J. K. Bousfield, who was considered to have an excellent chance of winning. This time was the fastest recorded at Cambridge for a number of years, and Byrne-Johnson was given his Blue. At the outbreak of war he was a member of the University O.T.C., and obtained a commission in the Rifle Brigade, getting his captaincy last autumn. Later he was appointed adjutant of his battalion. He was mentioned in dispatches.

Adopted from Germany. What has induced our working class women in Cambridge to dress their hair with the Gretchen braid plaited over their heads? This is entirely a German fashion, and one would have thought German fashions were out of favour, particularly with women. It has simplicity to recommend it, and it is becoming to a certain type of beauty, but it is a German style, and we do not wish to copy German ways of doing things. Surely our women can find some different manner of doing their hair. The adoption of the fashion at this moment is another illustration of the insinuating way in which German ideas are spread amongst the people of this country. # c.45.5

Vicar of Impington Resigns. During the afternoon service at Impington Parish Church on Sunday, the Vicar (the Rev. Dennis Hall) announced that the harvest festival would be held on the last Sunday in this month, and owing to the lighting restrictions, it would be held in the afternoon. He trusted the church would be decorated in the same manner this year as in past years. On this occasion, the Vicar said, it would be the last time he would occupy that pulpit as their Vicar. The Rev. Dennis Hall, who resides at Newnham, Cam-bridge, has been Vicar of Impington since 1882. He was formerly curate of Stow-cum-Quy. He is Honorary Assistant Under Librarian of the Cambridge University Library. A very good amateur carpenter, one of the first things Mr. Hall did at Impington was to buy a small organ from a parish church in Leicestershire, enlarge it, and fit it up in the church entirely by himself. He has evinced a keen interest in music, and himself possessed a fine tenor voice. The living is in the gift of the Archdeacon of Ely. 16 09 13

Presentation to Schoolmistress. On Thursday evening the parishioners of Little Wilbraham met together in the school to show their regard and esteem for Miss. Taylor, headmistress, by presenting her with a very pretty pompadour tea service and tray to mark the occasion of her approaching marriage. The Rector (the Rev. S. Streeten), in a suitable speech, presented the gift, and also a purse of money from the school managers. Mrs. Streeten, on behalf of the schoolchildren, presented Miss F Taylor with two large blue and white china fern bowls

Lights Out. The more we gain experience from others as well as ourselves the more we are able to appreciate the soundness of darkened streets and windows as, a precaution against Zeppelin attacks. There is little doubt that we have been helped in our time of peril by the obscurity which has been carefully and wisely prepared, and instead of being censured or railed at, all the people who have been concerned in enforcing the lighting regulations ought to be regarded as public benefactors, and made much of. The little personal inconvenience which has resulted from these precautions is nothing compared with the strain and anxiety which would be passed through under an actual raid. Some Cambridge people have had this unpleasant experience, and will be able to render public services by telling their irritable friends what a raid is really like, and warning them of the probable consequences to themselves and their neighbours of disregarding regulations framed really for their safety, and not, as so many of them profess to believe merely of their, annoyance. The writer has seen at a number of places in East Anglia the results of Zeppelin bombing, when the raiders, by accident, have managed to hit a building, usually some humble cottage, and can assure readers that such results are no trifling matters, whilst the shock to nervous people is lamentable. So we hope that in place of grumblings at the powers that be we shall all do our best during the coming .long dark nights loyally and wholeheartedly to second the efforts of those who are trying to protect Cambridge from aerial assault, and to safeguard the lives and limbs of their fellow townsmen. # c.45.5

New Mayor.—The choice of the Conservative members of the Cambridge Town Council, with whom the nomination of this year's Mayor rests, has fallen upon Coun. Lt. Col. B. W. Beales. He has consented to accept the nomination. In order to secure a unanimous vote of November 9 the nomination will have to be assented to by the Liberal members of the Council, and there is no doubt whatever that the approval will be forthcoming, and that the Town and University will welcome heartily the appointment of Coun. Beales to be Mayer of Cambridge. Coun. Barnet Wm Beales is the son of a late Alderman of the Borough, who, like himself, was a Volunteer officer and also a Freemason. The Mayor-nominee was elected on the Council as a representative of the Market Ward in November, 1903, and is the second senior Conservative councillor. He is Chairman of the Fire Brigade Committee and this year was elected a bailiff of the Borough on the elevation of Mr. Owen to the aldermanic bench. He is also a member of the County Council and churchman, and has been churchwarden of All Saints. But he is best known to the general public as a former Volunteer and Territorial officer. Entering the Cambridge Volunteer Corps as a private, he finished up by commanding the 1st Cambridgeshire Territorial Battalion and retired a few years before the war with the rank of Lt. Col. He is a member of the Territorial Force Association and of the War Pensions Committee.

Death of Mr. C.T. Holt. The death took place yesterday (Tuesday) morning of Mr. Cuthbert Thomas Holt, the well-known leather merchant of 64 Sidney Street, Cambridge. Although of a. quiet and retiring disposition, the late Mr. C. T. Holt was particularly well-known throughout the district, and was a man greatly respected and esteemed. A son of the late Mr. Henry Holt, the deceased gentleman was born in Cambridge 72 years ago, and succeeded his father in the business in 1888. This he carried on until his death, with the assistance of two of his sons. For several years he was an overseer for the Borough. He was a regular worshipper at Holy Trinity Church and for 14 years held the position of churchwarden. 16 09 27

October as Usual. October opened as usual at Cambridge. Whatever other accompaniments of the beginning of the academic year may have been absent from the commencement of the present week, the weather was faithful to traditions, and offered the usual damp and dismal welcome to newcomers to the University. Many a Cambridge man in the past has had his early enthusiasms chilled by our uncongenial climate, but has stayed on to become a devoted son Of Alma Mater, and to realise that though external circumstances may minister to one's happiness, they can neither altogether make it or mar it, and that the great charm of Cambridge is its internal associations. It is to be feared that Freshmen this year will be fewer even than the diminished numbers of last-year, but few or many, we extend to them a cordial greeting, and the heartiest wishes that their stay with us may be pleasant and profitable.

Killed in action. We are pleased to say that our local casualty list is the shortest we have been able to publish for some time past, but regret to have to record the death of Lt. Edward Spearing, son of Mr. James Spearing (of the firm of Messrs. Eaden, Spearing and Raynes. solicitor, Cambridge) and Mrs. Spearing, Troodos, Great Shelford. Great sympathy will be extended to Mr. and Mrs. Spearing in the loss of their only son, who promised in due course to achieve considerable success in local legal circles.

Won D.C.M. Another Cambridge man to win battlefield honours is Company Sergeant Major Wm. North, of the Royal Scots Fusiliers, who has been awarded the D.C.M. for bravery, having crawled to the German trenches and carried his Company officer, who was badly wounded, back to our trenches. Having done up his wounds he gallantly went back and led his company to the attack. C.S.M. North enlisted in the Regular Army in 1912 at the age of 18. He was formerly in the employ of Messrs. Headly and Edwards, Newmarket Road, Cambridge, and has been in France and Belgium for two years. He is well-known in Cambridge.

Position of the University. Matriculation concluded on Tuesday and showed that the number of Freshmen who have entered this Term is 156. Three years ago we had become accustomed to count the new members of the University in four figures, but we must be grateful for small mercies. We badly miss the stream of vigorous youth, whose annual incursions rejuvenated Cambridge and kept us from remarking the advance of age or becoming fossilised in ways or opinions. The stream is running so small now that we hardly notice its presence, but it has not altogether stopped, and is helping the University to carry on the work of the intellectual mill. The "Cambridge Review" publishes some greatly interesting figures in its current issue. It estimates that the number of undergraduates who will be in residence this Term - men of all years - will be 444. In the Michaelmas Term of 1913 there were 3,263 undergraduates in residence, and the total had remained around these figures for several years, so it would seem that the war has reduced the roll of students of this University to nearly seven-eighths below the normal, and we are afraid we have not yet touched bottom. In spite of the numerical and financial difficulties, the teaching staff are making heroic endeavours to maintain the standards, and the course of lectures which have been arranged are really wonderful under the circumstances. # c.45.5 # c.36.9

Juvenile Parish Clerk and Postman.The 11-year-old son of Mr. Alfred Arber, of Bottisham (one of the village postmen for 24 years and church clerk) is, as far as possible, carrying on the duties of his father, who has joined the Colours. The boy rings the bells at 9 o'clock on Sundays, and starts the chiming of the bells for Divine Service. He also looks after the church clock, and most of the work which was carried on by his father. Possibly he is the youngest church clerk on record. The mother also takes her husband's place in minding the children, in church.

Conscientious Tribunals. The Cambridge Borough Tribunal and the Cambridge County Appeal Tribunal appear to be doing their work in a manner which should be an example to others. They realise that every interest has to be seconded to the imperative necessity of winning the war, and that if for the winning of the war practically every able-bodied man in the country has to be taken from his occupation it has to be done, no matter how great the personal or financial inconvenience, for if we lose the war we have lost ever thing. The last sittings of the two above-mentioned tribunals were remarkable for the few, the very few, exemptions allowed, and if every tribunal did its duty as conscientiously as these two are doing theirs, the scandals of which we have heard so much of late would soon be a thing of the past, equity would prevail, and the Army would get the men it wants, the young vigorous men, and not the inferior substitutes it now has to take. # c.45.5

New Mayor. Tomorrow morning at noon, the Cambridge Town Council will assemble for the election of the Mayor of the Borough. The choice has already been made, and nothing remains but for the completion of the statutory and ceremonial formalities, tinder the agreement, which has been in force since 1892, and which enables the political majority and minority on the council to nominate in turn a candidate for the office, the right .of selection this year devolves Upon the Conservative members, who have nominated Councillor Barnet William Beales, the senior representative of the Market Ward, and the nomination has been approved by the Liberal members, so that Mr. Beales' election will be unanimous, the University members always concurring in these agreements. Mr. Beales, a consistent churchman and Conservative, has been a borough member of the County Council since 1904, sitting for Bridge Ward

Induction of New Vicar. The induction of the Rev. W. R. Harrison to the living of St. Andrew's Church, Grantchester, took place on Sunday morning. There was a large congregation to witness the ceremony in spite of the inclement weather. The service was taken by the Ven. Archdeacon Cunningham, who also preached the sermon. The churchwardens, who conducted the new Vicar round, were Mr. J. Nutter, junr., and Mrs. Assheton. Evening service was held in the church on Sunday for the first time since the Lighting Order, the windows being darkened by dark material fastened to a framework

The Gale. The windy weather experienced for some days culminated on Sunday in a terrific south-easterly gale which played havoc among tiles, etc. (at Bottisham). In several places branches of trees, as well as trees themselves, were snapped, but fortunately no one was hurt.

Unanimously Elected. — By the unanimous vote of the Cambridge Town Council, Lt.Col. B. W. Beales was last Thursday elected Mayor of the ancient Borough of Cambridge for the year ensuing. That the choice was a popular one was evidenced by the interest taken in the event by the public, who crowded the public gallery, and the heartiness of the congratulations showered upon the new Mayor by his colleagues on the Council.

Golden Wedding Gift. — At a meeting of the Quarterly Court of the Governors of Addenbrooke's Hospital on Monday, the Chairman (the Rev. J. B. Lock) mentioned the interesting fact that Mr. and Mrs. Charles Finch Foster had given to the Hospital the sum of £1,000 commemoration of their golden wedding. Mr. Foster had asked that the Hospital should assign a bed, in consequence of this gift, in accordance with their by-laws. The General Committee had gratefully accepted this very liberal donation, and the inscription on the bed would be as follows: "A Golden Wedding Gift. 1866. October 2. 1916. Mr. and Mrs. Charles Finch Foster endow this bed to commemorate the fiftieth anniversary of their wedding day". This was, added Mr Lock a very valuable present and he ventured to say it was an example which they might hope others would follow # c.21.4

Master of Sidney. — The death occurred early on Monday morning of Mr. Charles Smith, M.A., Master of Sidney Sussex College, since 1890, and second senior head in the University, the doyen amongst whom is the Master of Trinity, the Rev. Dr. Montagu Butler, whose appointment dates back in 1886. Mr. Smith was elected Vice-Chancellor in 1895 and again in 1896, and carried out the duties with the quiet dignity which was his great personal characteristic. His health has not permitted of his taking any prominent part in University affairs of late years. He was a Governor of Eton College from 1896 to 1909.

Degree for New Zealand Premier —The Rt. Hon W. F. Massey, Prime Minister of New Zealand, visited Cambridge on Saturday and received the honorary degree of Ll.D. It was a typical November day, sleet and rain falling continuously. A large number of ladies were present, and the attendance included over a score of wounded Colonials and other wearers of khaki.

G.E.R. Egg and Poultry Demonstration Train during its tour of East Anglia. The train, which began on October 9 at Mildenhall, concluded on Saturday last at Bishops Stortford. Former Mayoress of Cambridge.— There passed away at her residence, Manor House, Chesterton, on Monday, Mrs. Louisa Bell, a former Mayoress of Cambridge, and the oldest resident of Chesterton. Her death will be regretted by many. Mrs. Bell was the widow of Mr. Edward Bell, corn and seed merchant, who was twice elected Mayor of the Borough. He was first elected Mayor in November, 1887, and was re-elected the following year. He died, however, in March, 1889, during his second year of office. Of a kind and charitable disposition, the late Mrs. Bell was beloved by all who knew her. During her husband's lifetime she interested herself in parochial work in St. Edward's parish. She afterwards moved to Chesterton, and here she has been an active church worker in St. Andrew's parish for many years past.

Diamond Wedding. Mr and Mrs. J. A. Holmes, of 57 Abbey Road. Cambridge, have just celebrated their diamond wedding, having been married on November 28, 1856. They have two sons and six daughters living. One son died in Hong Kong; he took part in the Sudan War and held the medal and the Khedive Star. Their eldest son is serving with the R.D.C., having joined up soon after war was declared. They have four grandsons (all brothers) at the Front, one in the 1st North Staffs, (of the now famous Sixth Division, who were at Cambridge in 1914) having been gassed and wounded. They have one daughter, a V.A.D. nurse, connected with the Uppingham Section. Their eldest son has also three stepsons, who have been serving since the beginning of the war in Mesopotamia. They have two daughters munitions-making. They have reached the ripe old age of 83 and 80 respectively, and enjoy fairly good health, and have 15 grandchildren and three great-grandchildren. # c.45.5

Pachmann at the Guildhall.—A large audience was present at the Guildhall on Monday evening to hear a pianoforte recital by this wonderful performer. Pachmann is quite unlike any musician at present before the public: in his playing there is none of that "con furore" playing that the modern pianoforte lends itself so much to, but just a quiet delicate rendering, which holds the listeners spellbound, until one could hear the proverbial pin drop.

Railway Tragedy, — An inquest was held at the White Lion, Sawston, last (Tuesday) evening touching the tragic death of Mr. James Ward, head of the firm of Messrs. J. Ward and Co.. bakers, of Whittlesford. The body of the deceased gentleman was found at 12.20 p.m. on Monday on the side of the railway track near the Whittlesford footpath between Sawston and Whittlesford. It is surmised that the rail guard of a passing engine had struck the deceased's neck, in which there was a deep gash. The left arm was badly shattered. Death was apparently instantaneous. Mr. Ward was nearly 70 years of age.

Headmaster Appointed Rector. — The Rev. C. J. N. Child;-Headmaster of the Cambridge and County School for Boys, has been offered and has accepted the living of Moulton, near Newmarket, in succession to the Rev. H. Smith. Mr. Child will be leaving Cambridge next March. The resignation of Mr. Child as Headmaster of the school will be a distinct loss to the cause of education. No man was more fitted for the headship of this important school and his departure will be regretted not only by the present scholars, who have, a warm regard and affection for their headmaster, but by the managers and local educationalists generally. Mr. Child was appointed to the headmastership in 1900. He was Chaplain of Emmanuel College from 1898-1903 and curate of St. Botolph's, Cambridge, from 1897 until 1904. He was educated at Christ's College, Cambridge and was Winchester Prizeman in 1898. The living of Moulton is in the gift of Christ's College, and is worth £450 with a rectory. # c.36.5

Died at the age of 102. Much regret will be felt at the news of the death of Mr. Sawyer Simpson Foote, which took place at Teversham on Sunday at the age of 102 years. He was the son of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Foote, of Teversham and was the last surviving member of their family. Mr. Foote lived in Teversham all his life. When a young man he helped his father with the farming, and he was present when the late Rev. C. H. Spurgeon preached his first sermon in a thatched cottage in the village. Mr. Foote was well-known in the district for his upright and, straightforward character and. his determination to do good. He was married over 70 years ago, and brought up a family of 11, six of whom are now living. His wife died at the end of July, 1889, and up to about five years ago, Mr. Foote carried on a small carrier's business.

The shrine is of polished oak, and is Gothic in design and of great beauty. Just below the eaves is the inscription: "Greater love hath no man" while, at the head of the Roll of Honour 1 are the words "For God, King and Country

Cambridge in 1916. The year 1916 (says a leading article) is very, near its end, the remainder of its allotted span being numbered almost by hours. It has been an eventful, but also a most trying year, and few will mourn its departure, uncertain though the coming days may be. The shadow of the war had rested heavily upon Cambridge, and the depression. In our material condition has deepened. The University has almost ceased to exist. Our normal industries are at a standstill. Agriculture has been crippled, trade, has been upset and homes ravaged by the necessity of withdrawing men of serviceable age to supply the manpower needed for the fighting forces. Many families have been bereaved through the toll of human life taken by this awful war and anxiety has bitten more and more into our hearts with the passage of months. Yet there has been no faltering of purpose ... no whining for an end to be put to the struggle. Cambridge has been more bitterly tried than at any period in its modern history and never have its people shown themselves more courageous. What we have lost in prosperity, we have gained in character and thus it may be that this gloomy year of 1916 has left a happier impress upon our future than at the moment seems apparent. # c.45.5

Christmas Railway traffic. — Altogether this year the Christmas traffic on the G.E.R. has been slacker than usual at Cambridge. There was, in the early part of last week, a good deal of passenger traffic, particularly among munition workers and soldiers. The general public, evidently responding to the appeal made to them, did not travel as in previous years. The extra trains on Sunday, however, were well filled. There were fewer passengers than usual, and the pressure on this department therefore was not so great as in previous years.

Captain J.C. Lauder killed – The death of Capt J, C. Lauder, Argyle and Sutherland Highlanders, only son of Mr. Harry Lauder the well-known comedian will be regretted by many in Cambridge. Capt. Lauder was educated at the City of London School, and continued his studies at Jesus College, Cambridge. He had taken his B.A., and intended to adopt law as a career. When war broke out he was visiting Australia during the vacation. He immediately decided to join the Army, returned to England and went into the Argyle and Sutherland Highlanders. For some months he trained with the regiment at Bedford, and during this period the gaiety of the camp was considerably ably added to by the fact that. Mr. Harry Lauder used to visit his son, and always made a point of singing to the men, Capt Lauder was wounded at Festubert and was invalided home suffering from gas poisoning in September, 1915. Last year he was again wounded and he had not been back with his regiment for more than a few weeks at the time of his death on Friday last. He was an unusually popular officer with all ranks, and his loss will be deeply felt.

Fire at Nursery — Damage estimated at about £200 was occasioned by fire which broke out on Thursday evening on the premises of Mr. C. Townsend, of Fordham Nurseries. The fire originated in some wheat straw which had been stored next to a corrugated iron shed. There were about nine tons of straw, the whole of which was destroyed, together with some 25,000 bamboo canes. Firemen's efforts to prevent the flames from spreading were successful.

Well Known Farmer and Auctioneer – many will learn with regret of the death of Mr Frederick Grounds of Elwyn House March, a member of an old and respected North Cambs family. Deceased, who passed away at the age of 65 years, had in failing health for some time past. A native of March, Mr. Frederick Grounds was the son of Ambrose Grounds who owned and kept the Griffin Hotel also carried on the business of a brewer. The hotel was sold upon the death of Mr. Ambrose Grounds but his son continued to carry on the brewery until 1900 when it was discontinued. The family chief pursuits of Mr. Ambrose Grounds were those of a farmer and auctioneer and to these Mr Frederick Grounds finally devoted himself. As an auctioneer, Mr. F. Grounds was very successful. He established the March market some 30 years ago and under big control the business considerably increased. In recent years the conduct of the business has devolved upon his eldest son, Mr. F. D. Grounds', who was in partnership with his father. The late Mr Grounds took a keen interest in public affairs and rendered great service to his native place in many capacities.

Cambridge Vicar's Marriage — At the church of All Saints, Milton on Monday morning the wedding took place very quietly of the Rev A.C. Allen, Rural Dean, Vicar of Little St Mary's Cambridge and Miss Mary Elizabeth Hawson (Sissy) Pryor, elder daughter of Mr. J. V. and Mrs Pryor of Furness Lodge, Cambridge. The officiating clergyman was the Rev. G. A. Weekes, Dean and Fellow of Sidney Susses College. The bride, who was given away by her father, was married in her travelling dress. There were no bridesmaids or best man. A family breakfast was held at Furness Lodge and later the Rev. and Mrs. Allen left en route for Bournemouth, where the honeymoon is being spent. The presents were numerous and costly.

What is to be the future of Cambridge?
Since the war began we have seen the position and character of the place more and more changing and the material prospects of us all becoming less and less clear and assured.
The war may terminate this year or it may not and it is uncertain if the ending will bring any immediate relief
We have to realise that the Cambridge of the future will be a very different Cambridge to that we knew before the war
A complete generation of undergraduate life has been lost to us. The university tradition of many families has been broken and perhaps destroyed. The fortunes of ancient houses have been seriously encroached upon. The easy leisured marking time of the immediate past has closed.
In the building up processes which are to come we shall have to face a time of strenuousness and new ways which we shall be wise to prepare for.
When the war altered all things there were four sources of revenue upon which Cambridge was principally dependent for its prosperity: the university, the building and allied trades, agriculture the residential population.
The majority of the undergraduates disappeared at once on the declaration of war; their seniors have followed one by one in response to various demands for scientifically trained men and patriotic workers. Today a mere remnant of every class is left.
The effect of on the trading and industrial population of the town has been serious. The bulk of the university business has been interrupted. The university and the colleges have been obliged to reduce their establishments and members of families which for generations have served in many capacities and become identified with various institutions have been dispersed in all directions.

The university lodging-house keeping industry was in an advanced stage of decay in 1914 due to the extension of the colleges and the change in undergraduate taste and in 1917 has absolutely disappeared. In fact we hardly know the University and the University hardly knows itself.
Agricultural should be more prosperous at present prices but is badly handicapped by the withdrawal of labour, and the reduction in the labouring class population has had an effect upon shop-keeping traders.
Building has come to a standstill and the majority of the workers are under arms. Enterprising firms have kept their yards open by undertaking munitions work and erection of huts and have found a great deal of employment for women but the regular courses of the trade have been suspended and the various allied institutions such as brickmaking are injuriously affected.
The residential population, leisured and commercial, which the municipality has been at much pains to attract have largely disappeared. The great advantage of a liberal train service over four lines of railway and an exceptional freedom of communication with London have ceased to exist under present war conditions and we cannot doubt that this element of the residential population deriving its wealth from elsewhere has been dissolved.
With regard to numerous shop-keeping classes, they have found they need not necessarily depend upon the university for its existence, although the prosperity of the town must always to a very considerable extent be bound up with that of the University. The practical suspension of university life as obliged traders to turn their attention elsewhere which may render Cambridge more stable than it used to be under the seasonal impulses and depressions of the university terms and vacations.
As for the future the University we hope always to have with us and great as has been the shock we hope the university will recover its position though it will be a matter of time. More strenuousness, more attention to the business of study and less to play, more economy in living and more practical purposefulness whilst at the same time preserving the fundamentals of education are amongst the things which are seen as essential provisions at a truly national university. More room must be found for brains and less given to wealth and influence
In any case there will be more 'poor' men at Cambridge than there have been in the past and this change of circumstances will materially affect the university traders and the numerous college servant class.
In most respects the position of Cambridge academically and commercially will be very different from that what it was before the war and it is highly improbable that the old state of things will ever return. Full term will unquestionably be longer, the qualifying residents for a degree may be shortened and from the commercial point of view it seems probable that the university will be a less important factor.
Can industries be established?
Consideration must be given as to the possibility of introducing and establishing a certain number of industries in Cambridge. The advantage to the town would be enormous both economically and socially.
This would not interfere with university life; the colleges and university buildings are placed on the west side of town the work and working-class populations have no choice but to go to the east side.
That great businesses and great factories can be developed and maintained is shown by the history of Messrs Chivers and any person can speak of what an advantage the growth of this firm has been to labour in the district where an improvement in the condition of one class readily affects the condition of all.
We hope the foundation of a Chamber of Commerce may lead to the setting up of a Town Development Committee on which capital and labour will be represented and that its deliberations may lead to Cambridge regaining its ancient place as an important commercial centre.
We need more commercial and industrial opportunity. Now is a favourable time for taking this matter up. We invite opinions and suggestions and hope a practical scheme may be involved to the lasting good of our ancient borough. 17 01 17a

Schoolmistress resigns - Miss Theobald, the respected headmistress, has resigned her office as teacher of the village school, after a period of service extending to nearly 37 years; she is probably the oldest teacher in Cambs. in years of service under one body of managers, A movement is being promoted in the village and among old scholars to present her with some mark of recognition for her work in the village during that long time,

"All Wrong" . The proposal that young girls might be trained for milking and feeding cows, that is "turned from, domestic employment on to a farm to work among boys and men without any supervision" is declared by the Cambs. County Education Secretary to be a system "that is all wrong." The opinion is contained in an interesting report which comes before the Cambs. Education Committee today, when the Agricultural Sub-committee will report that they have considered the resolution passed by the Cambs. War Agricultural Committee to put in hand at once a scheme of training for women in milking and other agricultural work, together with a report by the Education Secretary on training girls as milkers.

Combing Out, — We are glad to see that, the "combing out process" has reacted Cambridge, and that several snug retreats of comfort-loving young men are being put under inspection. Some adverse comments were; made by members at a late meeting of the Town Council and by ourselves concerning the presence of men of military age and fitness in one of its departments, and we find this week that they did not fall upon stony ground. The (military service)Tribune has reviewed one of these cases, and notwithstanding the pleas and protests of his chief, the young man has to go and do his duty, not only to his country, but to the other young men who have voluntarily gone before him. Town Councils and other public bodies should set an example, and| it is really remarkable that after two and half years of war and the reiterated statements of Lord Derby and our generals as to needs of men, any corporation should be found retaining in its service a single person qualified for military service, unless that person can be shown in fact, and in the clearest possible manner to be indispensable in his position in the national interest # c.45.5 # c.35.7

Battlefield Honours—The Military Medal has been, awarded to Pte J. W, Spriggs son of: Mr, and Mrs Spriggs of 115 Ross Street, Cambridge, for gallantry in the field. Prior to joining the Colours, Pte. Spriggs was in the employ of Messrs. Bailey and Tebbutt (brewers)

Killed in naval battle.—Mr. and Mrs .A. Madison, of Stapleford, have received official notification that their second son, Sub Lieut. Bryant A. Maddison, R.N.R., was killed in the naval action in the North Sea on January 23rd. The deceased officer was 20 years of age and secured an apprenticeship in: the Merchant Service before joining the Navy. This is the second son Mr. and Mrs. Maddison have lost in the war.

Margarine. - Mr. J. West Knights Public Analyst, of The Laboratory, 57 Tenison Road, Cambridge, writes: The rule of a "g" before "a" is always hard. The word margarine is derived from a Greek word signifying a pearl in allusion to the pearl-like appearance of that particular fat before it is coloured in imitation of butter. It has the same derivation as the Christian name Margaret; which means a pearl among women.

Golden Wedding.—Mr. and Mrs. W. Saunders, of Brook Cottage, Histon, celebrated their golden wedding on Wednesday, January 24. They were the recipients of many letters and telegrams congratulating them upon their 50 years of married life. We are sure that every member of the various town and village cricket clubs will unite with us in our own warm congratulations to Mr. Saunders, the erstwhile redoubtable county cricketer and well-known captain of the Histon Cricket Club. Owing to the illness of Mrs, Saunders there was no house party to celebrate the event. Many old inhabitants of the village have cause to remember the marriage of Mr. arid Mrs. W. Saunders, as they were granted a half-holiday from the Church Voluntary School to witness the unique event of a double wedding in the parish church. A sister of Mrs. Saunders (now Mrs. John Newman, of Leicester) was also married on the same day. The officiating clergyman was the late Canon C. W. Underwood, the then Vicar of Histon. Mr, W. Saunders is well-known in cricket circles throughout the county. His unbroken cricketing career extended over 50 years - probably a record never beaten in England - and was captain of the famous cup-fighting, village cricket club (Histon and Impington) for 25 years. He was presented with a silver rose bowl to commemorate the event. The first time an England XI returned from Australia (in the sixties) they were opposed by another team, picked from all England, on Parker's Piece. The latter side, for whom Mr. Saunders made 22 and took a number of wickets with his slow bowling, won. In those days, playing for Cambridgeshire against such sides as Yorkshire and other counties, Mr. Saunders - an amateur, was a successful bowler. Cambridgeshire at that time had some of the finest cricketers in England, including Bob, Carter, George Tarrant, Tom and Dan Hayward (uncle and father respectively of Tom, of Surrey fame), F. Pryor, J. Fordham and Mr, Saunders. # c.38 : cricket

Germany's last effort – by the declaration of unrestricted submarine warfare Germany has declared that she feels unable to continue the present land war beyond a very limited time, and so has staked everything on a despairing attempt to starve out this country by sinking all our food ships. That this police, if carried out with the ruthlessness which no doubt we may expect, will cause her considerable in convenience is undoubted, but that it will force us to yield and sue for peace is a ridiculous assumption quite on a par with that extraordinary inability to gauge the mentality of her opponents which has characterised Germany all through this war.

Lady Fordham. The deepest possible sympathy will be extended to Sir H.G. Fordham in the death of his wife Lady Fordham which occurred at Odsey after a long illness on Saturday last. Lady Ethel Maude Elizabeth Fordham, who was 47 years of age, was a daughter of the late Rev. Thomas B. Berry, M.A., and the widow of Commander Stewart Carnac Weigall, R.N. She was Sir George's second wife, the marriage taking place at St. Margaret's, Westminster, on August 4, 1914. Lady Fordham formerly resided at Redlands Grange, Ashwell. She took a keen, interest in her husband's public work, and since her marriage rarely missed being present at the meetings of Cambs, County Council, of which Sir George, is of course, the chairman. She was one of the three lady members of the Child Welfare Committee for the county, which carries on a very important work under the new Notification of Births Act. She had a warm place in her heart for the County Nursing Association and served on the Governing body of the Cambridge and County School for Girls. Lady Fordham did a lot of good in a quiet, unassuming manner, and although her association with organisations in this county had been of comparatively short duration, she will be greatly missed. A gifted lady, she recently published a book for children which gained considerable popularity.

Mr. Adeane, C.B. The Year's Honours list has been published without revealing the supposed secret of a new knight for Cambridge. There is no Knight therein, but we have the great pleasure of congratulating the Lord Lieutenant of the County. Mr. C. R. W. Adeane, upon being appointed a Commander of the Bath. Mr. Adeane has well earned the modest honour by the work he has done on behalf of the Territorials and the Volunteers, and we may reasonably expect that it is a stepping stone to something higher.

Killed in Action. -A smart capture was made by Mr, P. Matthews (Impington) on Friday last, when he shot a magnificent fox on Mr. Macfarlane Grieve's estate. Master Reynard had made some successful midnight raids prior to his being shot, and had done considerable damage. This is the seventh fox that has been shot by Mr. Matthews, some of which have wrought much havoc in the neighbouring poultry houses.

Gas Explosion. A gas explosion under the floor of the bar of the The Jolly Butchers public house, Newmarket Road, Cambridge, caused a fire to break out on Thursday morning. The landlord, Mr. A. W. Hawes, had a narrow escape, for, although knocked down by the force of the explosion, he escaped injury. The cause of the explosion was apparently a leakage of gas, but exactly how it occurred is unknown. The gas meter was blown from its position, and three large windows and a quantity of glass in the bar were broken. The floor boards became ignited, and although the licensee took prompt action, he found it impossible to extinguish the flames with buckets of water, and so gave the alarm to the Fire Station. The firemen, with motor tender and escape, were speedily on the scene, and the fire was soon extinguished. An examination of the gas pipes failed to reveal from where the gas escaped. # c.24.4 # c.27.4

Averting coal-less days - Many expedients had been adopted to overcome the difficulty of coal delivery. In many instances people had been down to their last shovelful and in some cases there had been coal-less days even among the well-to-do. Some of the G.E.R. staff at Cambridge determined to run no such risks so they devoted a Saturday afternoon to unloading a truck of coal, filling bags, loading them onto lorries, and taking them home. This energetic band of "amateur" coal heavers evidently enjoyed their "afternoon out", assisted by one or two "professionals". We understand one lorry delivered nine tons of coal in one day.

Successful season — The Histon Juniors football team have just completed a most successful season. They have the following remarkable record: - Matches played 17, won 16, lost 1; goals scored for 63 against 13. We expect to hear more of these young sportsmen when once again we get into the full swing of sport and when the piping times of peace return.

Fire at Histon. A fire broke out at Messrs. Chivers' factory at Histon on Sunday, and although involving considerable damage, it was, thanks to the efficiency of the appliances which were to hand, and the energetic steps taken by many willing helpers, fortunately prevented from assuming alarming proportions. The outbreak occurred in the temporary gas engine house attached to the drying floor which has recently been erected in connection with the new vegetable drying plant at the factory. The damage to the building and. plant probably amounts to about £200.

Women Scavengers. The following is an extract from the minutes of the Paving (etc.) Committee which will come before the Cambridge Town Council, tomorrow. — The chairman reported that Mrs. Keynes, Chairman of the Advisory Committee for Women's War Employment, had suggested that some of the workmen employed by the Corporation might be released for National Service and the scavenging of the streets be carried out by women. The Borough Surveyor explained that he had placed no obstacle in the way of the men going, but he had not pressed any men to go. The Committee approved the action taken by the Borough Surveyor. # c.21.15

Portrait Presented — An interesting event, which took place at the opening of last Thursday's meeting of the Cambridge Borough Council, was the presentation to the Council, by a few old friends, of a portrait, painted in oils, of the late Alderman W. P. Spalding. The portrait shows the late Alderman in mayoral robes standing in a familiar position, with a sheaf of papers in one-hand and the other resting on a desk—an attitude he often assumed in debate. It is the work of the eminent artist, Mr. C. E. Brock, and is from a photograph by Messrs. Palmer Clark. Throughout the meeting it rested on an easel placed close by the spot where for so many years Ald. Spalding sat in the Council Chamber. The work was greatly admired, and the gift much appreciated by the whole council.

St. Patrick's Day at Hospital. - —-The wounded Irish soldiers are not likely to forget the celebration of the great festival of St. Patrick, which took place at the 1st Eastern General Hospital (Cambridge) on Saturday, as, through the generosity of a committee of ladies and kind friends, they were entertained in a right royal fashion. The day commenced with the celebration of the Mass by the Bishop of Northampton (Dr. Keating) in the Hospital chapel, and his Lordship addressed the large congregation on the subject of St. Patrick. At the close of the service, the Bishop confirmed one of the boys. In the afternoon a tea was given to the soldiers and Irish nurses in the hospital recreation room. Crackers, cigars and sprigs of shamrock were presented to the soldiers. After tea, the tables were cleared and a fine concert was given to the guests. The room was packed.

Road, Cambridge, on Saturday, when Private J. J. Caffrey, V.C. of Nottingham, was married to Miss Florence Avey, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Avey. 69 Great Eastern Street, Cambridge. Like all heroes. Pte. Caffrey is very disinclined to say much about himself. It was on November 15th. 1915, when Pte. Caffrey (who is a stretcher bearer in the R.A.M.C. attached to the York and Lancaster Regiment) was sent with a corporal into "No man's land" in order to rescue a wounded comrade. After bandaging the man the corporal was shot in the head whilst endeavouring to put him on Pte. Caffrey's back. Our hero then placed the man down again, bandaged the corporal and brought the former into our own lines. He then returned for the corporal and also reached our lines with him. Pte. Caffrey is also the possessor of the Cross of St. George given by the Tsar of Russia on October 23, 1914 which he won by carrying a wounded Brigadier-General to the base, which was two miles away, and all the time exposed to heavy shell-fire. # c.45.5

A Religious Non-observance. The Bishop of Ely (says the writer of Town and Country Topics) has addressed a very sensible letter to the diocese upon the subject of Sunday labour. He admits that under the present great emergency a man may go and work in his garden or on his allotment without offending any law, human or divine, but he pleads that the nonobservance must be a religious non-observance. We must not permit ourselves to lapse into paganism, but must regard our work as a response to the great and urgent duty, a practical form of Christian effort. Thus considered and carried out our working on the seventh day may help us to become a more Christian and not a less Christian nation. We commend the Bishop's letter to the very careful consideration of all thinking men and women.

Mr W.A. Macfarlane-Grieve. The death took place of Mr. William Alexander Macfarlane-Grieve at 9.40 on Sunday night at his Cambridge residence 35 Trinity Street, at the age of 72 years. The deceased gentleman was educated at St. John's College, Oxford, where he proceeded to the degrees of M.A. and Sc.L. In the year 1896 he became an incorporated M.A. of the University of Cambridge. He also held the degree of F.S.A. of Scotland of which he was always very proud. Mr. Macfarlane-Grieve bought Impington Park shortly before joining Clare College. He was known to be a staunch Conservative, although he had never taken any active part in the various campaigns, nor did he take any active part in the public life of the district. He was, however, an active member of the County Bench, being created a magistrate in 1903. It was only a fortnight ago since deceased's eldest son, Lieut. A. R. Macfarlane-Grieve of the Argyle and Sutherland Highlanders, was killed in action (March 17) and he also lost his daughter recently. He leaves a widow and three sons, all holding commissions in the Army. 17 04 11

"The battle of the Gogs". Unknown to practically everybody in Cambridge, the cadets in training and some of the colleges carried out a series of fine manoeuvres on the Gog Magog Hills. Now following the enterprise of Mr A.J. Pointer, of the Victoria cinema, Market Hill, it will be possible for people to follow the progress of what has been described by a high military authority as a fine piece of work. The film commences with the picture of the cadets preparing for 'knife and fork' drill in the great dining hall of Trinity College and another scene in the grounds depicts the number of cadets at work on filling bombs. Vivid interest is awakened in the scene depicting the battalions marching along Kings Parade on route for the battlefield. Arriving at the scene of operations we are treated to a spectacle of a realistic attack, followed by a rigorous bombing counter attack by the enemy. Aeroplanes from a neighbouring aerodrome are shown in action and drop bombs with deadly precision in the enemy lines. Gas is also used with wonderful effect and this really up-to-date battle includes an attack by one of the now familiar 'Tanks'. Trench inspections are also depicted and the erection of wire entanglements, blowing up a mine, and persistent attacks and counter attacks arouse the greatest interest. The film is really a wonderful production and should be seen by all interested in the welfare of the sturdy young men who are receiving their training in our midst 17 04 18a; photos – 18c # c.45.5 # T.G.. # J.Gog

Explosive Found on Gogs - On Thursday evening an accident occurred at Cherry Hinton in which a boy named Edwin Jennings, of 55 Hartington Grove, had three of his fingers on one hand blown off and the other hand injured. It appears that a brother had been to the "sham fight" (cadet manoeuvres) on the Gog Magog Hills in the afternoon and had brought borne a bag. Edwin opened it and inside was a small metal tube embedded in sand. Whilst examining it, it exploded. The boy's mother, who was standing near, was knocked down by the force of the explosion but escaped injury. Dr. Coombes was called in and he dressed the wounds and ordered the boy's removal to Addenbrooke's Hospital, where he is still lying. On inquiry, we were told he was fairly comfortable. As a result of what the injured boy's brother said that other boys had similar bags. Inquiries were at once set afoot by the police. It was found that boys had picked up various articles and cartridge cases. One boy, Onyett by name, had taken another of the (canvas) bags home, and with other boys, had actually been using it as a ball. On hearing of the accident, Mr. Archer, chemist, of Cherryhinton Road, went to Mr. Onyett's house, and advised that the bag should be put into water, and this was done. The accident will probably serve as a warning to others. # c.45.5

Bishop of Ely and British Reprisals - The following letter from the Bishop of Ely (Dr. F. H. Chase) appeared on Monday's "Times". — Sir. Some expression ought, I think, to be given to the profound regret at the news that Allied airmen have dropped bombs on the open town of Freiburg, and have killed and injured women and children. Those who speak with me believe that, unspeakably great as has been the provocation (1) a policy of reprisals is useless, for the German Government will care nothing for the death of a few civilians, and, further, we shall have started a competition in frightfulness in which we shall not contend on equal terms. (2) a policy of reprisals will prove disastrous, for we cannot now appear with clean hands at the great assize which will follow the war; we shall have had our share in lowering the standard of international morality. (3) a policy of reprisals is essentially wrong, Yours faithfully, F H. Ely, The Palace, Ely, April 19.

Great Push, — With the recommencement of fierce fighting on the Western Front the casualty lists; have assumed larger proportions, and as might well be, expected, Cambridgeshire men figure amongst, those who have fallen in the great cause of liberty. Numerous names are published. # c.45.5

Fire coincidences — On Saturday, about 7.30 p.m., the electric wires in the cellar of Hobby s restaurant, Hitchin, fired, setting fire to a beam. Smoke, issuing from the fire alarm box outside the shops attracted attention. One or two firemen near were verbally informed, and put out the fire promptly. Then, a curious thing happened - the fused wires fell across the fire alarm box wires underground, and set all the alarm bells at the firemen's homes ringing. The brigade turned up in uniform to find "everything over but the laugh."

Unusual Accident. An extraordinary accident occurred at the top of Victoria Road and Histon Road on Friday afternoon. A horse belonging to Mr. Edward Bolton, attached to a Corporation water-cart, which was about to flush a sewer, suddenly backed, it's off hind leg going down the manhole. Assistance was soon forthcoming, and the harness was removed from the animal. With the aid of some poles and a rein, which had been buckled around the leg, the horse was raised from its unfortunate position after several attempts. Luckily, the animal was apparently none the worse for its adventure.

Killed. — A further number of local men were reported to have been killed on the field of battle. The latest published list included six names, a Histon couple losing a second son.

The petition was to His Majesty the King, and has been forwarded to him by the Home Secretary. Cambridge School of Flying and Aerodrome Company Ltd at Hardwick is equipped with hangars and workshops and all the necessary adjuncts to a well-equipped aerodrome. Within the hangars are housed five Tractor Dual Control biplanes of Government types and adjacent to the hangar are the workshop replete with every requirement of aviation. The skilled pilots under the supervision of Mr Assehton Salton include B.J. Curry and T.H. Drew, the first civilian to receive his pilot's ticket at the Cambridge School of Flying. Until recently the school has only been open to military pupils but now have decided to admit a limited number of pupils for immediate tuition, a speedy training being given for pupils intending to enter the Royal Flying Corps or Royal Naval Air Service. The machines are Cauldron biplanes, the safest and best machine for school and tuition work. In spite of the fact that practically every pupil had no previous experience with aeroplanes it is highly creditable that not a single accident has occurred to any pupil during the past six months. The aerodrome is frequently open for the public to witness exhibition flights – 17 06 06a; illustrated advert 17 06 06b

Shortly before the outbreak of war he accepted a call to the pastorate of a Glasgow Congregational Church, but he obtained leave from his church and joined the R.A.M.C., feeling that it was his duty. In this regiment he rapidly gained promotion. He had served in Ireland and France, and was going out to Egypt when his ship was torpedoed. # c.45.5

Allotments, - A walk round the various allotment grounds in the Borough of Cambridge is distinctly encouraging ('says the' writer of Town and Country Topics), for the most unpromising plots of the newly-cultivated land are turning out better than the most optimistic might have expected. The crops are through the soil, and show splendid promise, and the allotment holders must feel greatly encouraged and well rewarded for their labours, which have not been light. We hope that as the result of war-time measures the gardening habit may be re-¬established at Cambridge. A quarter of a century or so ago gardening was practised very extensively in Cambridge, and amateur horticulturists and college gardeners were produced who accomplished wonders in the way of intensive cultivation and carried off prizes even in All-England shows. The growth of Cambridge and other causes checked the gardening habits, which has now another opportunity, and we hope it may now progress. # c.18

Little boy sent to prison. At the usual meeting of the magistrates in Ely on Thursday, J. Cropley Esq., presiding, a little boy, about 8 years of age, was sent to prison for 14 days and to have a whipping for stealing some bread. It appears that his father, a very respectable tradesman, sent the boy for some bread, giving him some money. The boy, not seeing anyone in the shop, took the bread and kept the money, afterwards saying that he had meant to pay. Some persons may imagine that the whipping and one day's imprisonment for child of such tender years would have been sufficient; others may have a contrary opinion.

Mr. and Mrs. Simpson celebrated their golden wedding four years ago. They had lived most of their married- life in Peekshill, U.S.A., 14 years being spent in Cambridge, On June 23rd. Mr. Simpson died in Addenbrooke's Hospital, and two days later, Mrs. Simpson, who had been in weak health, died also. Deceased were buried in the same grave.

Sir Beerbohm Tree. Cambridge (says the writer of Town and Country Topics) heard with very great regret of the death of Sir Herbert Beerbohm Tree, which occurred from heart failure on Monday night. The truly great actor was associated with the renaissance of the drama in Cambridge, typified by the provision of what is still known as the New Theatre. Then Mr. Beerbohm Tree, he laid the foundation stone the inscribed face of which forms part of the wall of the entrance lobby, and he gave a memorable performance of Hamlet on the afternoon of the opening day. His death at the age of 63 leaves a very conspicuous gap in the ranks of our first-rate British actors.

Presentation.—Mr. A. S, Orlebar, Chairman of the County Education Committee, presided at a meeting held at the County Hall on Wednesday afternoon, when a presentation was made to the Rev. C. J. N. Child, late Headmaster of the County Boys' School, of a beautifully illuminated address and a cheque for £64 on his retirement after having held the appointment for 17 years.

War Bonus Snowball. The warning we gave in these columns recently of the possible extension of the demands for war bonuses and similar increases from public officials continues to be justified (says the writer of Town and Country Topics). A month ago the salaries of certain of the officers of the Cambridge Guardians were advanced in this way. At the last meeting of the Town Council, further members of the Corporation staff received additions to their pay. Today the Cambridge Guardians are being asked to allow war bonuses to two more of their officials. And so the thing goes on, ever increasing like a snowball, and most certainly never diminishing for to all intents and purposes these are permanent increases. We do not wish to appear mean in any way and we agree that public bodies should set an example to other employers, but we plead that consideration should also be shown for the poor ratepayers. The public official has his salary guaranteed to him. The average ratepayer has not. Is the average ratepayer to be the only person? Who is to be called upon to make sacrifices, and is bureaucracy to go free?

Jones of 10, Shelley Row, Cambridge, a regimental stretcher bearer in the Norfolk Regiment, has been awarded the Military Medal for gallantry and devotion to duty when attending to the wounded under very heavy fire during an attack east of Givenchy in September last. Private Jones, who is 21 years of age, enlisted in September 1914, and was for ten weeks in France and then in hospital in England for 15 weeks with frostbite. In March, 1915, he returned to France, and he now lies in a Chester hospital with a poisoned leg and foot. Previous to enlisting, Pte. Jones was employed at a Norwich hotel. # c.45.5

Burning Fatality at Ely. A shocking affair occurred in the early hours of July 4th at Ely, when Mrs. Jemima Chapman, aged 80, was burnt to death in her bedroom'. The old lady who lived at Bohemond Street, was an old-age pensioner. Miss F. Chapman, deceased's daughter said she slept with her mother. On the night in question, she woke up to find the room in flames, and rushed downstairs to get palls of water. She thought deceased must have knocked the lamp over. They were in the habit of burning a light all night

A Warning,—A Fulbourn correspondent writes: Will those persons who have been robbing the allotments and school gardens of their produce stop their little game at once, or proceedings will be taken-against them. They are well known.

M.P. Resigns, — We live in stirring times (says a leader writer), and when we went to Press last week no one in Cambridge had the least idea that in 24 hours our Member (Mr Almeric Paget) would have resigned his seat in order to make way for Sir Eric Geddes, the newly-appointed First Lord of the Admiralty. However it has come to pass and we are assured that the extreme haste with which this momentous change has come about was entirely due to political necessity, and in no way can our retiring Member be blamed for not taking his constituents into his confidence any earlier. Mr. Paget carries with him the cordial good wishes of all the Unionists, and, we venture to think, of nearly all the Radical Party, in his retirement from the Membership of this historic Borough, which he has so ably represented for nearly eight years. # c.33

Chaplain Killed. Capt the Rev. Herbert Green, M.C., Chaplain to the Forces, and fourth son of Mr, Henry Green, C.C., of Linton, fell in action, on August 24. He gained the Military Cross at the second Battle of Arras for devotion to duty and care for the wounded under very heavy fire. The late Captain Green was born on January 16, 1889 and after entering business at Cambridge, offered himself for the Wesleyan Ministry in 1912, entering the Richmond Theological College. The outbreak of war found him in his last year at college, and with several other brother students he joined the Royal Naval Division, being stationed at the Crystal Palace and Blandford. In the following year he was given a lieutenancy, and in the year after that he was transferred to the Chaplains' Department, being ordained in September and proceeding to France. He married in November, 1915, Miss Olive Barugh Barugh of Linton to whom the deepest sympathy is extended. On the very day that her husband was expected home on leave, she received the sad tidings of his death in action.

Heavy Fruit Crops.There have been exceptionally heavy crops of gages and plums in this district (Eversden), and fruit growers have been glad of the help of soldiers, public schoolboys, College girls etc., quite a number of whom have been employed. It has thus been impossible to avoid a great deal of waste. The absence of wasps was almost pleasantly noticeable when the plums were ripe. The longed-for sugar has arrived—nine bags of 100 pounds each. It was distributed on Satur¬day morning and a good lot of it has been converted into jam by now. Most people got what they ordered and were grateful.

The Vicar (the Rev. C, Howard) read the dedica¬tion prayers. The window, which is a single figure panel, has for its subject St, Philip, and is a very beautiful piece of work. It was designed, made and presented to the church by Mr. Thomas C. Eastwell, son of Mr. and Working man J.P. We have to record the death of a highlyesteemed townsman and a prominent figure in Friendly Society circles in the person of Mr G. H. Barnsdale, J.P., who passed away at his residence in Cherryhinton Road, Cambridge, on Wednesday morning last. For some time deceased had been suffering from an internal complaint (cancer) and the end came quite peacefully. A Hearts of Oak man, he took part in the founding of the Friendly Societies Institute at Cambridge and the Friendly Societies Council. He was born in 1851 and on May26, 1906, had the honour of being presented to the King at the opening of the new offices of the Hearts of Oak Society in Euston Road, London. In November, 1915, he was appointed a J.P. for the Borough of Cambridge, which appointment he faithfully filled up to the time of his death. He was the first, working man to be made a J.P. for the Borough.

Stackyard fire at Eversden. At about 1.30 on Friday afternoon the alarm was given that a fire had broken out in the stackyard at the Manor Farm, Great Eversden. The fire brigade were sent for and arrived at 3 p.m. from Royston. The firemen soon got to work, and so relieved the many willing workers, of whom a great number were women. It was sad to see the corn stacks burning, and the stables and granary were burnt to the ground. A heap of nine ton of coal also caught fire. To add to the excitement, an aeroplane was seen hovering around, and descended in a field behind the fire. The airman had lost his bearings and thought the fire was an aero¬drome. The volunteers were put on guard while the airman had a night's rest, and next day he started off for has destination. # c.26.1

Black Saturday. The last day of last week (says the writer of Town and Country Topics) was a Black Saturday for a good many housekeepers, who flitted vainly from shop to shop in an endeavour to obtain a supply of lea. The threatened shortage had become an actual one, and it is to be feared that in many households on Sunday all manner of makeshifts had to be adopted to provide a substitute for the comforting beverage the present generation of English people have come to regard as an indispensable and common accompaniment to the breakfast and the tea table. It is by such homely crises that the fact that we are at war, and what war means, is being brought home to us even more effectually than by the terrible sacrifices of human life and physical powers we have been called upon to make in the great struggle for freedom. The experience of Saturday last was not peculiar to Cambridge. It was general throughout the country. # c.45.5

An Excellent Custom. Mr. and Mrs. Fison kept up the old custom of entertaining the men of Primrose Farm, Little Wilbraham, and the men from the Quy Farm to a splendid harvest supper. Post Office Veteran.—Mr. Kenneth Mackintosh has been the recipient of an Imperial Service Medal and a valedictory letter from the Postmaster-General after serving 32 years in the postal service. He came to Cambridge from Inverness in 1895.

The Zeppelins, - Cambridge (says the writer of Town and Country Topics) was disturbed from its long immunity from air raid warnings on Friday, when Zeppelins "made an unwelcome reappearance in this part of the country."It was gratifying to find that immunity had not rendered our people in any way intractable. The police instructions were carried out in most cases without any protests even when those instructions went to the extreme length of directing men to extinguish their pipes or cigarettes. A few householders were a little difficult to manage with regard to lights, but that was probably due more to ignorance than from obstinacy, and now that those householders know that the danger was really near, and that carelessness on their part might have produced a calamity similar to the kind which befell two or three London areas, they will probably show more prudence in the future. The streets were extremely quiet as well as dark, and we congratulate both police and public upon the success of the measure adopted for our protection. # c.45.5

Municipal Year. The municipal year (says the writer of Town and country Topics) is drawing to a conclusion. The year has been a more active one in municipal affairs than its predecessor. There has been less disposition to carry on marking time, and an impatience to do things, which is probably a local expression of confidence that we are winning the war. We still hold firmly to the faith that while ensuring the most efficient administration possible economy should be most severely studied; but there are certain members of our bodies who had an itch for spending money and a passion for starting new ventures and new and expensive ways of directing old ones, and they certainly are not being suppressed as rigorously as they ought to be. Disturbing influences should be discouraged in every possible way. We ought to take upon ourselves no new burdens until the war is ended and we are able to take stock of how we stand at Cambridge and what are our immediate prospects.

Allegations against smallholders - A report of the Smallholdings and Allotments Committee, moved for adoption at the quarterly meeting of the Cambs. County Council on Saturday contained a paragraph regarding notices to quit or cautions given to smallholdings were not properly cultivated. Ald. Redfern said it appeared from the report that out of 73 tenants 61 were not satisfactory. He thought it was time they had the assurance that things were not so bad as they looked.—Coun, H. G, Few said they had 400-odd tenants and of that number they had 58 in the Western and 15 in the Eastern Division who were not entirely satisfactory with regard to their cultivation. Nine tenants were to have notice to quit and they occupied 65 acres 3 roods 31 poles out of 10,408 acres. No man could point to any private estate which, in the same piece of land there was as little complaint as that. They must be reasonable in their attitude towards the smallholders who had great difficulties to master. Ald Refern said he had served his purpose in obtaining the information he wanted # c.18

Histon Comedian Killed — We regret to announce that news has been received that Mr. Bere Carter, of Histon, has been killed in action in France. The news was conveyed home in a letter to his wife. Bere was a sapper in the Royal Engineers and had been in France for a few months. He is the eldest son of Mr. Alfred Carter, of School Lane, Histon, who has two other sons serving. It appears Bere was killed instantaneously by a shell which dropped almost at his feet, and he has been buried at an English cemetery in France. Bere was undoubtedly one of Histon's finest productions and had a brilliant future. He was one of the finest comedians in the country hand had been "on the boards" for a considerable time ere he joined the colours. He had been with two theatrical companies and had become assistant stage manager of the company with which he was connected. He was only recently married to a member of his company. Bere was well known in Cambridgeshire before he left home for the stage and had appeared in many concerts in the districts. He was a general favourite in Histon.

M.P. dies of wounds. General regret will be felt at the news which was received on Saturday , that Lord Rosebery's second son, the Hon. Neil Primrose, member for North Cambs, has died of wounds received during the operations m Palestine. Mr. Neil Prim-rose gave brilliant promise of making for himself a distinguished place in political life, and the news of his death will be received both in and out of Parliament with the utmost regret. It is but seven years since he entered the House of Commons, in which his father never sat, and he quickly won from the members respect for his abilities and affection for his personality. He was born in 1882, and after distinguishing himself at Eton and Oxford, he was elected M.P. for North Cambs in January, 1910. In the following December he was again returned, defeating Lord Robert Cecil, the son of another ex Prime Minister.

Saved by New Testament On October 12, at the Ypres front, a bullet went through the knapsack on the back of Pte. F. Jelks, of the Surrey Regiment, passed through a copy of the New Testament, and entered his back. In the opinion of the medical officer who extracted the bullet, the Testament undoubtedly saved the man's life. If the bullet had not passed through the Testament it would have gone much deeper in his body and killed him. The Testament was like those distributed by the Y.M.C.A. in France. Pte, Jelks is in Ward B at the 1st Eastern General Hospital, Cambridge.

Awarded Medal. Corporal George Gifford, R.G.A., of Great Shelford, has been awarded the Military Medal for conspicuous bravery. A fire broke out in a gun pit which contained large quantities of ammunition, and at great risk, Corporal Gifford entered the pit, and single-handed, extinguished the flames, thus averting what, would have probably been a disastrous explosion.

Caution Needed, — The Food Control Committee (says the writer of Town and Country Topics) really must move more cautiously, or they will add to domestic troubles instead of decreasing them. They were asked to help in the milk difficulty, and their reply is to propose that there should be only one delivery of milk a day. Then on Monday evening they voted in favour of stopping the delivery of bread from house to house, and obliging the already jaded and bewildered housewife to fetch the daily supply. This action might release a few men and would save the burning of a comparatively small quantity of petrol, but it would enormously increase anxieties in the homes of our fighting men as well as of those who are carrying on the business of the nation, without affording any compensation whatever, for we do not notice that it is proposed that the price of the loaf should be lowered or the quantity or the quality of the supply of bread increased. We wish to help and not hinder the Committee in their work, but they really must remember that their chief duty lies in protecting the interest of the consumer. The producer and the shopkeeper can look after themselves.

Mayor a D.D. A most animated spectacle was provided in the Senate House on Friday afternoon, when the Honorary Degree of Doctor of Divinity was conferred upon the Rev. E. C. Pearce. Master of Corpus and Mayor of Cambridge, in the presence of a large gathering of members of the University and of the aldermen and councillors of the Borough Council, who attended at the invitation of the Vice-Chancellor. The occasion was unique, as there is no record of any previous Mayor of Cambridge having been an official member, and certainly not one of the presiding chiefs of the municipality receiving a degree, honorary or otherwise from the University during his year of office. It also had further interest from the fact that the Mayor's brother, the Ven. E, H. Pearce, Archdeacon of Westminster, was to receive from the same Congregation the degree of Doctor of Letters. # c.35.7

A Hare Raid. — Histon had a hare raid of its own on Tuesday afternoon. One of these animals made its appearance in the High Street, near the "Gables" and ran the length of the street to the Green, where it took refuge by swimming the brook, It was compelled to swim back across the brook by dogs, and after an exciting chase was eventually killed by one of the soldiers engaged in cleaning operations there

Fall of Jerusalem. The bells were rung at the Parish Church (Oakington) when the news was received of the fall of Jerusalem, and a thanksgiving service was held.

Meat Shortage. — On Tuesday morning the newspapers published Sir Arthur Yapp's announcement that there is a definite shortage of tea, butter, margarine, ham, bacon, and meat, and the meat shortage looks very serious. Cambridge householders have realised all these things throughout the month of December, and now they have a special trouble of their own looming before them. The local butchers have publicly declared their intention, of closing down their shops on Saturday next "unless some higher selling price satisfactory to the butchers is fixed by the Local Food Control Committee," and this we understand the Local Food Control Committee have declined to do. The trouble is one of some standing, and has been gradually accentuated. The shortage of the supply of meat in the London markets has sent the buyers into the provincial cattle markets, and the competition of the London-men has forced prices up to a point which renders it impossible for them to sell at the maximum price fixed by the Local Food Control Committee except by incurring heavy financial loss.

Margarine Queues - The queues, which have been getting larger day by day in Petty Cury, assumed such alarming dimensions on Saturday that one person at least was injured and others fainted. Margarine was the chief commodity sought, a supply having been delayed the day before owing to the fog. The Borough Food Control Committee took commendable action to consider how best to relieve the situation. They suggested that traders should transfer their stocks of margarine to the Corn Exchange and sell it there, and the Committee would give them every facility; they also suggested the margarine should only be sold in 1lbs, or multiples of 1lb. Some was transferred and between 2 and 4 o'clock 1,000 transactions in margarine had taken place. The people were arranged in queues outside the hall. The margarine was put up in 1lb and 2 lb packages, the limit to each person being 2 lb. Everything went off without a hitch # c.45.5

An Anxious Weekend. — Cambridge housewives, in common with those of other towns, says the writer of Town and Country Topics) are unlikely to forget their experiences of last weekend, when a shortage of meat developed. For the first time a realisation of what war really means was brought home to family circles who before had suffered slight inconveniences, without any serious effect, and now stared blankly upon the dire possibilities of encountering want amongst plenty, through the power of money being overmastered by scarcity. Some Sunday dinners were of a very unusual character, and everybody felt uncomfortable as to the future. Official statements have been made that the matter will right itself after a little while, but the state of the markets does not allay anxiety, and cattle breeders are seen to be in an ugly mood and to be stubbornly resisting the attempt to place them under a rule. The domestic Chancellor of the Exchequer needs to be a person of no mean ability in these days to "carry on" the family affairs with smoothness and efficiency, and we must all have sympathy for her. 18 01 09 CIP # c.45.5

New Appointment. The many friends of Mr. A. Ball have learnt with pleasure of his selection by the Postmaster-General to fill the important position of the Postmastership of York. Mr Bell is an East Anglian, and entered the Postal Service at Norwich in 1880. His abilities there were quickly recognised, and he rose to the position of Chief Clerk. In 1910 he was promoted to the Postmastership of Great Yarmouth. In 1913 the Postmaster-General further recognised his abilities by promoting him Postmaster of Cambridge. During his comparatively short time in Cambridge he has shown himself skilful in the management of the work that falls so heavily upon administrative shoulders owing to abnormal conditions now prevailing. At a representative gathering of both the indoor and outside staffs at the Post Office on Monday afternoon a presentation of a silver table set was made on their behalf by the superintendent (Mr E. G. Poulter). Mr. Bell left on Tuesday for York. 18 01 16 CIP

Death of Dr H. M. Butler. The death of Dr. Henry Montagu Butler, the venerated Master of Trinity, in his 85th year, which occurred at the Lodge at midday on Tuesday, has left a blank in the life of Cambridge which no surviving resident can fill. For over 30 years, during which he held the mastership, Dr. Butler had been the admitted head intellectual of the entire community, for he entered thoroughly into the activities of the whole place, whether of the University or the town. A brilliant speaker, he was in great request at meetings of all kinds, and intensely interested in social problems and progress. He gathered at the Lodge on many occasions men and women engaged in social and literary work of many kinds and of diverse classes. To all he was the hospitable, courteous and kindly host which made him so much loved. 18 01 16 CIP

Record Floods,—As a result of the heavy fall of snow on the evening of January 15-16, Cambridge was visited during the weekend by such high floods as have not been known for many years. With the melting of the snow the Rivers Cam and Granta assumed a very muddy and turbulent appearance, and the water gradually increased in volume until in places it overflowed its banks and inundated many of the low-lying lands in the district. Since Sunday morning, however, when the floods were at their height, the waters have subsided with remarkable rapidity.—Great havoc and distress was caused by flooding to houses situate in Mill Lane, Sawston, the houses being under water some four or five deep from Saturday midday until Monday morning. The deepest flood for 15 or 20 years was experienced at Ickleton on Saturday. The river began to overflow on Friday afternoon, so that several meadows were under water, but by early Saturday morning the meadows between Ickleton and Chesterford were inundated. The people in Mill Street had a very unpleasant experience, as the street was flooded from one end to the other to the depth of several feet. Most of the people had to keep in their houses, and in some cases the basements of the houses had about six or more inches of water . . . If the river had been banked up along the meadow at the bottom of the street much inconvenience would have been saved. 18 01 23 CIP # c.12

Floods. Tthe severe weather and the thaw of last week has had further detrimental effects upon the trees at the Backs of the Colleges and our riverside walks (says the writer of Town and Country Topics). Many old familiar arborial friends have been dismembered, notably the veteran weeping willow on the south-west side of Trinity College Bridge. The floods which followed the thaw rose to a considerable height and considerable damage is now seen to have been done to the river banks at Sheep's Green. Part of the trouble here is said to have been caused through the flood gates at the Apron being out of repair, and a casual inspection shows them, to be in a very dilapidated condition. The condition of the streets this weekend has been deplorable, presumably owing to the shortage of labour and haulage, but an improvement is now being effected. We hear rumours of further demands from labour, which appear to be due to the irresponsible way in which workpeople are being attracted to some new enterprise. We think that representations should be made to the Government as to the mischief that is being done and a more rational system introduced. 18 01 23 CIP # c.18

The Floods,—we understand that a special committee has been appointed to find out the cause of the recent flooding of Mill Lane Sawston where damage was done to homes of people and other property. A preliminary meeting has already been held, and it has been decided that a thorough inspection of the river is to be made shortly to find out the cause and to suggest, if possible, a remedy to prevent floods of a similar description. The Special Committee consists of representatives of the Linton Rural District Council, the Sawston, Whittlesford, Duxford and Ickleton Parish Councils, and Mr. H. G. Spicer of the Sawston Paper Mill together with the District Surveyor. 18 02 27 CIP

Factory Blaze.—A fire, which did a great deal of damage, broke out about six o'clock on Tuesday morning in the main building of Mr. H. G. Gray's Athletic Works, Benson Street, Cambridge. This building, which is a three-storeyed place, used partly as a workshop and partly as a storehouse, stands a few feet back from the road and adjoins a row of cottages. The flames, however, were confined to the building and the cottages escaped damage. 18 02 27 CIP

At the Ely Rural Tribunal [to decide whether a man should be exempted from the war due to the needs of food production] John Catchpole, 34, a farm labourer of Cage Lane, Stretham , married with seven children and a member of Agricultural Labourers' Union, applied for himself.
He was classified in B2 in 1916 and worked where he got the biggest penny. He added that a certain gentleman, George Driver, had offered his men £1 to dip him in the pond. Mr Davies – "Because you belong to the Trade Union?" Applicant: "Yes". Asked who the gentleman was, applicant said it was Mr George Driver. Mr Driver – "I shall be obliged if you prove it. It is the first word I have heard about it". The Chairman remarked that they did not want to introduce personalities. Mr Davies said the applicant ought to have had conditional exemption when he last appeared before them. Mr Driver again denied the accusation made by the applicant. Mr Davies said he was prepared to prove it was correct, and mentioned something about paying £50 to Addenbrooke's Hospital if it were not. Later, Catchpole said he did not object to work for Mr Driver or anyone else. Mr Luddington (National Service representative) pointed out that the man had been released by the War Agricultural Committee. Mr Driver said he should not think the man had done a week's work in Stretham since harvest. Mr Darby: "No farmer appeals for the man". Four members voted for dismissal and four for conditional exemption, and the Chairman gave his casting vote in favour of him remaining in civil life – 18 03 01(2)(3) ES

"Setting" an example. The setting of hens for chicks is now in full swing in the locality (Histon), and broods are coming off with varied success. One local enthusiast set a hen on 13 eggs, and the hen, after sitting like a rock for a fortnight, died. He was now in a quandary, but overcame the difficulty by putting the eggs into his oven, and a friend nobly came to the rescue soon afterwards with his incubator. As a result of the setting there were ten chicks, who are now doing well. 18 03 06 CIP

Minister visits Hospital. The Secretary of State for War, Lord Derby, made an unofficial inspection of the 1st Eastern Hospital on Saturday afternoon last. He visited the administrative offices, the Nurses' Mess and went round several of the wards. He spoke to each patient and was much gratified when he found a Lancashire man. He also found time to visit the recreation room, where the Irish ladies of the town had provided a sumptuous tea on the eve of St. Patrick's Day—all outside rationed food—for the Irish patients. This pleased him much. The kitchen and operating theatre were then inspected, and on the termination of his visit, Lord Derby expressed himself as being extremely satisfied with the arrangements, and especially with the open-air wards. 18 03 20 CIP # c.21.4 # c.45.5

Second-Lieutenant Innes d'Auvergne Steward Stitt, son of the Rev S. Stewart Stitt, Rector of Stretham was reported missing after Regiment's heroic stand at Towey Post on March 28th.
The Captain of the company to which he was attached, who is now lying wounded in a London hospital writes: "B Company were holding a front line post called Toyew Post. Innes was there with me for the three trying days & still more trying nights which preceded the attack. When the barrage started at 3 o'clock on the 28th I withdrew all my remaining men who were not absolutely indispensable at their posts to two deep dug-outs & sent the officers down there too. When the attack came at 7am everyone fought heroically. Innes was splendid, he stuck to me all the way through. When we had used all out bombs and nearly all our ammunition we went back to Naval Trench about 1,000 yards back. Innes was quite all right when I last saw him, unwounded and fairly fresh, but I had to leave them when I got back to Naval Trench as I knew I couldn't afford to lose much more blood & my revolver had been shot out of my hand". Another officer wrote: "I have discovered that he was wounded towards the end, but not seriously. Nobody who saw him wounded has survived, but his batman, since killed, told one of the few surviving NCOs of his platoon that he had seen Innes wounded, but not badly. So we are all hoping before long we shall have news of him from Germany" 18 04 19 ES

Rev Stitt writes: "The war is drawing us all together more than anything else could, for so many of us now are knit together by the common fellowship of suffering and anxiety, as well as uplifted with pride in the bravery and devotion of our boys. I suppose it is but fair that while they bravely endure inconceivable hardships at the Front in order to uphold the banner of Freedom, we, too, at home must suffer in our hearts and minds for the same glorious cause. And so we, too, if we take our sufferings manfully, shall share in the ultimate triumph of Good over Evil. This thought should cause us to keep up our courage and carry on. This month we have to record: Innes Stitt, missing (supposed to be wounded), Charles Porter, wounded and a prisoner; Charles Asplin, wounded and it hospital at home; Albert Routledge, badly gassed and in hospital at home; Thomas Cross, dangerously ill … Mr George Stitt will soon be leaving us for Keyham, where he will go through a course of training for the Royal Navy, as he has successfully passed the necessary examination with credit. Rector of Stretham and the Labourers' Union. An alleged statement and a challenge. A meeting of the Labourers' Union was held when there was a good attendance to listen to Mr Stubbs and other leaders of the Labour movement. A somewhat violent attack was made on the Rector of Stretham, the Rev S.S. Stitt, for a statement alleged to have been made that the Board of Trade alone was responsible for the advance of the wages of the agricultural labourer to 30s. per week, and that the Labourers' Union could claim no credit for securing the workers this benefit. In consequence of his assertion it was said that several members were deserting the Union. Mr Stubbs openly challenged the Rev gentleman to come forward and prove his contention that the Board of Trade had anything to do with the Corn Production Act or for the setting up of Wages Boards for the various districts. "It is disgraceful", he said, "that a representative of the Church, who knows the conditions under which the poor labourers have lived in the past under his very eyes, who has seen their wives and children badly clothed, badly fed and housed owing to the miserable conditions under which they have been compelled to live, but has never lifted a finger or uttered a word against this, or many any attempt to better their conditions, should now come forward to destroy the work of the Union in its efforts to give to the working man a ray of sunshine in his monotonous existence and to better the conditions under which he has to work" – 18 09 13 ES

The great news that the war which has raged for over four years had come to an end, reached Cambridge just before 11 o'clock on Monday morning. People were stunned. After the terrible ordeal we have gone through – the enormous sacrifices, the untold anguish … It did not take long for enthusiasm to reach boiling point and very quickly men and women were scurrying hither and thither conveying the news to all quarters of the town. Flags appears from goodness knows where in their thousands and soon the centre was gay with bunting … Union Jack hoisted at Town Hall and soon youngsters cheering in the streets … bells were rung, instruments of known and unknown descriptions gave forth sounds melodious and otherwise. A large number of cadets quickly arrived on the scene and soon some of the most daring spirits had mounted the highest pinnacle on the conduit, which was soon flying the flags of the Allies. Undergraduates commandeered any vehicle which chanced to be in the vicinity. Taxi-cabs and motor cycles with sidecars were run round and round the Market Square … Unhappily undergraduates degenerated into a vulgar rag … broke windows, wrecked old police courts and put bells of Great St Mary's out of action … Union Jack hoisted at Town Hall and soon youngsters cheering in the streets … bunting … rush to post office to despatch telegrams … unhappily undergraduates degenerated into a vulgar rag … broke windows, wrecked old police courts and put bells of GSM out of action – 18 11 13a, b

Busy Day for the Mayor, — The Mayor of Cambridge (Mr. Ralph Starr) had a busy day on Christmas Day, when, in company with the Mayoress and their son and laughter, they paid visits to most if the institutions in the town, including the Borough Sanatorium, the Children's Home in Ross St. the Workhouse, Mill Road, the 1st Eastern General Hospital, York House, Newmarket Road, which is the Children's Home of the Chesterton Union and (in the afternoon) Addenbrooke's Hospital. At the hospital, the Mayor visited every ward, speaking kindly words of greeting and comfort to the patients, finishing up at the soldiers' (Bowtell) ward. This visit concluded the Mayor's programme and he returned home for a well-earned rest after what he described as a happy and pleasing experience.

Influenza at Fulbourn Hospital. – At the monthly meeting of the Visitors in Fulbourn Hospital it was reported that there had been a considerable epidemic of influenza on the premises. It began among the nurses on the female side, and spread to the women patients. Prompt measures were taken, and it was almost entirely confined to two wards. During the last two weeks the male side had become infected, and nearly all the cases were from two wards. The numbers affected were: Female side: Staff 20, patients 34 Male side: Staff 4, patients 27. A doctor said they had the situation well in hand. There had been three deaths from the malady on the female side.

Surplus army horses sale at Cambridge
A consignment of exceptionally useful light and heavy draught horses were sold at Cambridge Cattle Market. Every horse had been graded as fit for service overseas and but for the signing of the armistice they would now be working with the troops in France. There were 12 of the heavy draught class which met with keen competition from London and local buyers while the 37 light draught horses comprise some very useful strong trotting vanners suitable for land or town work, and a few nice quality riding horses up to weight. There was a good steady trade and satisfactory prices were realised. Amongst the buyers was R. Law of Littleport. Taking them all round the horses constituted one of the best of the consignment sent to Cambridge. They were practically all sound and afforded an excellent opportunity for local people to purchase good horses fit for to do any sort of hard work they might like to put them to. German Prison Labour. Sir. I read that Lance Corporal W. Newton, Royal Fusiliers, was released from the army in order to resume civilian employment. On making application for work to his former employer, a well-known farmer of Littleport, he was refused, the agent telling him that he had already had more men than work for them. The majority of them are German prisoners point. If this is true I must say that I am absolutely ashamed of the way in which Tommy has been treated. I have lived in Cambridgeshire nearly all my life before the war and I hope all the Cambridgeshire people are not fixed up with German prisoners. If they are, could not something be done to dispense with them at an early date? I think there is plenty of work could be done by German prisoners elsewhere without being employed on farm work. Cambs Farm Labourers' strike, -The farm labourers of Chatteris are out on strike with the object of enforcing their demand of a minimum wage of 45s. per week. The trouble originated in some of employers attempting to lower the wages for the winter months from 42s. to 36s. - and the dissatisfaction occasionally led to a meeting of the union at which a resolution was adopted declaring that unless the farmers were prepared to grant a minimum wage of 45s, for all able-bodied men, the members would cease work. At a subsequent farmers' meeting, it was agreed to pay the following wages: Ordinary labourers £2, single horsekeepers £2 4s., casual labourers for threshing 9s. per-day and root labourers 8s. per day. This was published in the Press, but the workers met and said they did not recognise it as the proper medium of the farmers reply and decided to strike. Most of the Union men are out, and had been very peaceable. There has been no rowdyism, although a fair amount of passive picketing has been going on. 19 01 15 CIP # c.22 # c.32.5

Returned Prisoners Welcomed. Cambridge gave an enthusiastic welcome home to the returned prisoners of war on Wednesday last. A ready response was made to the request that the Inhabitants should hang out flags and decorations and thousands of people assembled on Parker's Piece and lined the streets to watch the men pass. The proceedings commenced with a general muster on the Piece, which was fortunately favoured by fine weather. Invitations had been issued to some 900 men, and the parade, when assembled, showed a response of about 850. Most of the men were in khaki, and were members of the Cambridgeshire Regiment, the Cambs. Battalion of the Suffolk Regiment (Kitchener's) or the Suffolk Regiment. A few were in plain clothes or in naval uniform. The men paraded through the streets to the Guildhall, where the Lord Lieutenant gave a heart-to-heart address, saying "Welcome, home to England," and adding that the country was proud of them. The County Council would take over the Ely to Prickwillow road as a main road provided the Soham or Middle Fen Commissioners were willing to move the collection of the tolls from the present situation at Prickwillow Bridge. These were let to Mr J.W. Taylor for a period expiring in October 1920. They would agree provided that the Ely Urban Council agreed to make and maintain a hard road for one-and-a-half miles along the back of the Commissioners' bank of the River Lark from Prickwillow to the boundary of Isleham parish. They would provide a foundation of 14 inches of clunch for the road for the purpose of strengthening the river bank. Mr Clarke, who is one of the Commissioners, said he had great difficulty in getting them to say that they would be willing to move the toll. They thought they would be handing over £14,000. The bank was a high one and was dangerous, and a hard road would considerably strengthen it. He spoke of what they would lose in rates should the bank give way and the land be flooded.It was in the interests of the children who went that way to school that there should be a good road. It would open up a main road to Isleham and Soham Fen. If the toll was cleared out of the way the County Council might consider the question of taking the Prickwillow Road over. Mr Harvey said they would be making a good road all round Mr Clarke's property, and he did not see why, without consideration, they should benefit any individual farmer in that way. But Cole Ambrose, Mr Worth and Mr Hiam all pay rates. Mr Clark said that the toll would not be abolished, but there would only be a hailing toll - 19 02 07 ES

Cambridge has accepted the new conditions in which it finds itself. The undergraduates roam the streets once more in sufficient numbers to make their presence notable. The colleges are pursuing their pre-war courses. The river again rings with the music of the rowlock and the discord of the rowing coaches. University clubs are re-opening their doors, University tradesmen have dug out their venerable notices of "University Requisites" and hung them in their windows alongside caps and gowns, socks and sweaters, ties and blazers. But the old times are not back. University life has replaced military life but it is a different sort of University life to that of before the war. The men are up for work and not for play. They are out for degrees and not for blues. Most who are 'up' are largely being educated at the expense of the State. That will not go on forever. The claims that sons of war profiteers will come up on papa's millions are untrue. The University does not want undergraduate spendthrifts and extravagance will be discouraged. Men must now show educational fitness and that is unlikely to be possessed by the existing progeny of the general run of war profiteer. We believe undergraduates will come in numbers which far exceed all previous experience, but they will come with the fixed intention of obtaining a degree as cheaply as possible. During the war the shortest cut to getting a commission was to have been at a public school or to University and in public services Varsity men got the best berths. People realise that education pays and will want their sons to obtain it. However the nation wants the best brains, irrespective of class or parental banking accounts. So the University is cheapening and quickening the pathway to degrees and the undergraduates of the future will have less money to spend and less time to spend it in. Thus while the volume of trade the University brings to Cambridge will be considerable in the bulk, it is not through such channels that fortunes will be made. We need a scheme for establishing an industrial area without detriment to the University. Cambridge is in the midst of a wide agricultural area with good railway communication and possessing a waterway direct to the sea which was a source of much profit in the past and might be again. There is ample room on the railway side of the town for works and for dwellings for the workers who can offer well-supplied markets and an abundance of healthy amusements. Out of Work.—We are very much concerned (says the writer of Town and Country Topics) at the announcement made to the Mayor last week-end that there are some 1,031 people out of employment at Cambridge. This is a very serious matter, and the question we should like to have decided at once is whether this unemployment is a matter of necessity or choice— in other words, whether it is due to lack of opportunities of work or is being fostered and maintained by the unemployment pay. We are disposed to believe that the latter is the case, especially with regard to the unemployment of women. Everywhere one hears of women being wanted in domestic service, but apparently the majority of them have: made up their minds not to take up such service, except upon terms and conditions which they cannot seriously hope to obtain. We believe that the out of work pay is responsible for a good deal of the (existing) trouble and we hope and believe that the nation will insist upon a prompt and thorough revision of the situation. 19 02 19 CIP # c.32.1

The River Ouse is in full flood following the recent thaw and rain. Men were busily piling up earth where the water had washed over the pavement from river to the railway crossing and were also engaged in similar work on the end of the bank which protects the G.E.R. allotments, the wavelets threatening to overflow the bank. The sight at Annesdale was extraordinary. The water had completely isolated the riverside cottages and the roadway outside the Cutter Inn was submerged, the water being very near the entrance to the public house. The few inhabitants of Babylon are imprisoned on the first floor. The Quay had been obliterated and the portion of the path outside the rod yard, Willow Walk, was under water. On Tuesday the river began to overflow the banks at Waterbeach fen. Farmers began hurriedly to remove their stock to places of comparative safety, while gang of 30 or 40 men set to work on the bank to try and check the rush. But they were unable to do much in face of the tremendous presence of water pressure. Their efforts, unfortunately, proved unavailing and on Wednesday morning, a portion of the bank gave way and practically the whole of the fen was inundated. Some eight farms are involved, and nearly all the houses and cottages on the fen are flooded. The flood was stated to be the worst within the memory of the oldest inhabitants of the village. The floods at St Ives were two inches higher than the 1875 record. The streets in the town are inundated and a terrace of 38 houses flooded out, the inhabitants are living upstairs. The railway lines between St Ives and Cambridge are under water and traffic is stopped. – 19 02 21 ES

Serious Floods. Not for many years has the County of. Cambridge been visited by floods of such magnitude or of so serious a nature as those experienced within the last ten days. Thousands of| acres are under water, and at Cambridge the water rose at one time to within six inches of the height reached by the memorable flood of 1879. At Ely the river touched a depth beyond any previously attained within the memory of the oldest inhabitants. It is good news to hear that since Sunday the water has been steadily falling. A serious break in the river bank midway between Waterbeach and Upware last Wednesday resulted in the disastrous flooding of hundreds of acres of low-lying land in the vicinity, the temporary isolation of several farms and cottages and considerable damage to stacks. On Tuesday night … above the banks at Waterbeach Fen where the break in the river bank occurred, and farmers took prompt steps to remove their stock to safety, but on Wednesday morning a break occurred, and the breach rapidly becoming wider, the water poured through. Farm buildings and cottages were surrounded, and the Inhabitants in some cases were forced to seek shelter in the village. All Wednesday farm workers and other helpers from Waterbeach and district worked up to their knees in water, but the gap widened, and it was found necessary to sink two barges in the breach. Thousands of sandbags were requisitioned and by this means the hole was filled and the inflow of water at this spot checked. Men have been employed night and day in "cradging" along the banks and strengthening the places where any water was found overflowing, this also being done on the Stretham bank of the Old West # c.29

Floods water was as high as it had ever been, invading Victoria Street and Annandale, and flooding houses. Suddenly on Monday morning the water went down a couple of feet and the subsidence was accounted for by the fact that the bank had burst midway between Ely and Little Thetford, flooding hundreds of acres of land on the Cambridge Road side of the river. It looked as though another river was running parallel with the Ouse. A portion of the bank was blown in for a short distance and the escaping water flowed towards Ely. Research on oxygen treatment for gas poisoning is an example of one of the ways in which the University has been of helped the country during the war. Its application to warfare was started in the Cambridge Physiological Laboratories early in 1917 under the direction of Mr Joseph Bancroft to whom the credit for so much of the research work so successfully undertaken. About 30 cases have been treated. All except perhaps two have derive more or less benefit, many have been completely cured and others have relapsed somewhat, but their condition has never gone back to what it was before they entered the hospital. 'Springfield', Sidgwick Avenue, which is being run as a special ward of the First Eastern General Hospital has beds for 30 patients. The treatment requires a certain amount of exercise and physical training and for this the spacious grounds can be utilised.There are 14 beds in the oxygen chamber which has been constructed in the grounds. It consists of a chamber within a chamber, the outer one serving to protect the inner from the weather. The inner is constructed of iron and glass to render it completely air tight. Access is by means of air-locks, one being one being for the use of stretcher cases. The chamber is arranged for 14 beds each provided with an electric bell and telephone. The treatment consists of adding oxygen so as to increase the amount to 50% as against the normal 20%. The air is drawn off through tubes fixed near the bottom of the chamber by means of an air circulator which forces the air through a purifier for the extraction of the carbon dioxide and organic matter; through another purifier for extracting moisture and then through an apparatus for either adding to or extracting heat from the air so that the temperature of the chamber was kept constant. The air is then returned through tubes fixed at the top of the chamber and thus the air circulation is downwards.The pressure of the air in the chamber is maintained at atmospheric pressure by means of air containers and automatic valves. There is a most interesting contrivance for ascertaining the results of the treatment; patients are required to undergo certain physical exercise with the pedals, their respiration the whole time being registered by means of an extremely clever device. The designs for the chamber and apparatus were prepared by Messrs Bailey Grundy and Barrett of Saint Mary's Passage who also carried out the works. 19 03 05a # c.45.5 # c.21.4 # c.36.9

Boy of 16 gaoled—Five lads appeared before the Cambridge Justices on Tuesday on a charge of stealing seven pigeons of the value of £10. Three were aged 14, one 16 and the other 17. The Mayor said he regretted three of the boys had been before the magistrate previously. The boy, aged 16, had been before the court on five occasions for similar offences. They regretted to have to take the course they had decided upon; they did not like to send a boy so young to prison, and personally he felt it very keenly. They felt, however, there was no chance for the lad unless they marked this offence and made the boy realise how serious it was. They wished to preserve the boy from himself and he decided to send him to prison for a month with hard labour. They trusted when he came out he would be a better youth. Fines were imposed in the other cases, the Mayor saying the boys concerned were too old to be birched. 19 03 05 CIP

5,000 Acres Under Water. In consequence of three serious breaks in the banks caused by the recent floods, it is estimated that about 5,000 acres of farm land, including some smallholdings, are still under water to a depth of from 2ft. to 5ft. in Cambridgeshire. In places the water stretches as far as the eye can see, cottages, farm buildings, stacks and just the top rails of gates showing out of the water. The breaks which occurred in the banks holding back the water resulted in large areas, hitherto regarded as safe from the inroads of flood water, becoming inundated. The damage has been most extensive and in some cases tons of produce, particularly potato crops, have been rendered almost valueless. The places where the banks gave way were (1) at Barway, on the Soham Lode, (2) at Waterbeach Fen, on the river Cam, (3) at Stretham and Thetford Fen, on the Old West River. The worst break was probably at Barway, where the bank apparently gave way from underneath, after being undermined by the water. Huge portions of the bank were torn away by the rush of water and can be seen now dotted about in the floods like little islands. 19 03 12 CIP # c.29

So he had allowed a much larger quantity of granite for this road. A letter was read from the Littleport and Downham District Drainage Commissioners on the expense they had incurred in metalling a portion of the Ten Mile Bank Road as a preventative against flooding and suggesting the council appoint a committee to consider the advisability of strengthening the road. Fruit harvest. The recent rains have quite transformed the out look as regards both fruit and vegetables at Cottenham. Even raspberries, which were looked on as being hopeless before the rain came, promise a good return. Strawberries also are much improved and with the high prices obtaining, are very remunerative. Much interest is being shown in the Christ's College Farm, which is let out in small tenements of acres and half acres. The scheme, when originated some four years ago, as will be remembered, met with a great deal of opposition from large landowners, and was generally considered a "white elephant." The success of the scheme, however, has exceeded all expectations, and the results of careful cultivation on the farm are enormous. In fact, the "white elephant" has grown feathers, and is now the "Goose that lays the golden eggs."

County Agricultural Show. The annual show of the Cambridgeshire and Isle of Ely Agricultural Society, which, during the war, has not been held, had a successful revival at Cambridge on Thursday. There was a large attendance of visitors, and compared with the show at Ely in 1914 the gate receipts showed an increase of something like 100 per cent, nearly £500 being taken at the pay boxes. This year a new feature was introduced by the president (the Rev. C. H. Brocklebank) who gave champion prizes of £20 each for the best horse, the best beast, the best sheep, and the best pig in the show. The winners of these prizes were judged one against the other — which was by no means an easy task for the adjudicators — in order to ascertain which was the best animal in the show and for this choice the president, offered … 20 guineas. This unique competition was open to all England and great interest was manifested 19 07 09 CIP

Victory Loan Race. — No-one anticipated that anything like the million mark would be reached by Cambridge in the Victory Loan Week effort; indeed, it was thought that if half a million was subscribed the Borough would be doing wonderfully well. The result, which must be highly gratifying to all concerned, placed Cambridge far ahead of Oxford in the Victory Loan race, the figures being: Cambridge £913.290; Oxford £485,300. This represents all new money; with conversions the Cambridge total reached £1,116,710. Such a large sum, besides indicating that Cambridge is in a prosperous state, also shows that those who had any money to spare invested it, no doubt with a view, not so much to take advantage of a sound investment in gilt-edged securities, as to assist in the work of reconstruction of the trade of the country. 19 07 16 CIP # c.32.8

In the main event of the day—a huge dinner on Parker's Piece to the discharged and demobilised men of the Borough—there was not a hitch of any kind. The arrangements were as near perfect as could be secured and the men seemed thoroughly to enjoy themselves. The town presented a gay appearance, all the principal thoroughfares being decorated with flags, streamers, etc. Nearly every side-street, too, had its decorations - there were flags and bunting everywhere. Immediately under the Guildhall clock was a large laurel wreath in the centre of which were the words "Their name liveth for evermore." At intervals during the day peals were rung on church bells. Several of the business premises in the town were illuminated with coloured lights during the evening. 19 07 23 CIP

Double Tragedy.Cottenham was thrown into a state of great consternation last weekend by the discovery of a shocking tragedy, wife of a small-holder being found in her kitchen at the pointof death with terrible wounds in her head and her 13-day-old child lying in the same room dead from the effects of a blow on the head. The scene of the tragedy was a neat little thatched cottage a few minutes' walk from the Cottenham main street. A hatchet, which was used for chopping wood, was found on the floor near to where the woman lay. Upon this were bloodstains and human hairs, and it was with this, apparently, that the woman had been struck, down. The baby was found dead in a linen basket, close to the mother, who died in Addenbrooke's Hospital later. At the inquests on the woman and baby, 'Wilful murder' verdicts were returned. A man was remanded at Cambridge on a charge of murdering the baby.

For some time past there has been considerable feeling amongst the farm labourers for Littleport over the long stay of German prisoners who are engaged on farms. The prisoners were introduced into the district towards the end of last year at a time when adequate local labour was not available. The number at that time was between 30 and 40, but later it was increased to about 100. The Germans have continued in employment, on various farms and with the increase of local labour through demobilization it has been felt that the justification for their presence has passed and that their services should be dispensed with. As the result of representations by farm workers. Captain Coop MP for the Ilse of Ely had an interview with Mr. Winston Churchill as a result of which the employment of the prisoners was suspended for 48 hours pending investigation. Afterwards, however, they resumed work. The matter was taken up by the Littleport branch of the Labourers Union who telegraphed the Board of Agriculture that serious trouble is brewing if steps are not taken. The prisoners are taking work from our men and their wives on the farms. A crowd of several hundred assembled in rain when Mr. Stubbings, a gangmaster, declared they must do their utmost to get rid of the Germans and urging the men to strike as a protest. After the meeting had been in progress for some time a Telegram was red from the Board of Agriculture. It read "Prisoners withheld pending inspector's investigations" and was received with cheers. The mining of oil shale on a commercial scale has already been begun by the sinking of a shaft at West Winch which is to have an output of 500 tons of shale daily. A second shaft is to be put down some few 100 yards distance and the combined output will be aerially conveyed to the three retorting plants situated at Setchey. There the first of an improved kind of brick retort has been completed and its fires were lighted for testing last week. A series of such retorts is to be erected as soon as possible and sites have been chosen at Blackborough End, Narborough, Runcton Holme, Shouldham, Wimbotham and Tottenhill which will be fed by the oil shales obtained from shafts in the immediate neighbourhood. The chief Refining Plant for treating the resulting crude oil from the destructive distillation of the shakes is to be erected at Stow Bridge on a site between the Great Ouse and the main Great Eastern Line from Kings Lynn to London. The crude from the retorts will be conveyed by pipelines from the various plants to the Central Refinery. Suitable storage accommodation will be constructed at Stow Bridge but many of the more valuable refined products will be taken down the Ouse to a central depot at Purfleet Quay, Kings Lynn. The whole of the mines and the retorting plants will be connected with the Great Eastern Railway by a special line which will leave the main line at St Germans Junction. At Setchey the line will divide and one portion will precede to West Winch where apart from the first retorting plart a brickfield is to be operated. The other section will run to the various mining and retorting centres. At West Winch numerous workman's dwellings have been completed while the finishing touches are now being given to a laboratory. A staff of nearly 200 is regularly employed. Although 16 test bores have been completed on various parts of the shale areas others are today either being drilled or decided upon. The most recent one is to be started at Wormegay and it is here that free liquid shale oil was met with at a depth or 28 feet. 19 08 27a

Cambridge market as now conducted is of no value to town … it is a waste of expensive shoe leather. Previously one could purchase a fowl or duck ready for table at a reasonable price, the famous Cambridge 'yard' of butter was available for sale and eggs, fruit, meat etc were to be purchased at fair competitive prices which allowed reasonable profits to the vendors. Now it is a dump where high prices are rule. Its principal patrons are those of fairly comfortable means who desire freshly-produced vegetables and fruit and are prepared to pay for them at prices dearer than in shops. On Saturday there was fairly brisk competition in fish, and meat stalls were doing good business but fruit prices were almost identical to those in the shops. An open market is wanted every day on Market Hill to bring down prices and dispose of tons of produce which will otherwise go rotten. The Cambs Fruit and Vegetable Society in Bridge Street has organised an 'open market' with locally-grown produce at prices favourable both to grower and purchaser. In Cambridge there are already hawkers of fruit and vegetables who sell produce at the door. During trade depression some traders had a hard struggle; their employees now coming back but require more wages to meet the rising cost of living. Fair competition doesn't cause anxiety but the open market is unfair. They buy wholesale, hire a stall for a negligible sum and sell at small margin of profit, market traders say. 19 09 10a # c.27.2 # c.27.3

Only policemen need apply. A protracted meeting of the Cambridge Watch committee was held in the Guildhall on Monday, when the business before the committee included the consideration of the question of the appointment of a successor to Mr. Charles Edward Holland, the retiring Chief Constable. The committee decided to advertise the post and in fixing the salary at £450 per annum with house, light and fuel, decided to restrict applicants to those who have served through all the grades in a civilian Police Force and attained the rank of Inspector or a superior rank. The age of the applicants must be not less than 35 years. The present Chief Constable also acts as Inspector of Hackney Carriages and Inspector under the Diseases of Animals Acts, and for these duties is paid additional remuneration, but the appointment lo these offices is in the hands of the Town Council. 19 09 17 CIP

Days of Peace and War by Alex Wood: Cambridge past snips September 24th 1919

Cambridge Newspapers were restricted from reporting during wartime. But once the conflict was over, their columns carried articles giving the first-hand experiences of those who served.
On 24th September 1919 the Cambridge Chronicle devoted several columns to a description by Alex Wood of one of the Voluntary Aid Detachments, painting notable record of work in days of peace and of war. It had started in 1912 with a course of lectures on First Aid to members of the St Columba's Mission Young Men's Club. But with the arrival of War in August 1914 a Voluntary Aid Detachment was formed. It was necessary to obtain and train at least 45 men, as Wood recalled
They were trained in first aid, stretcher drill, tent pitching, field sanitation construction and use camp kitchens. They had no uniforms and only one regulation stretcher but provided themselves with a second stretcher a cap and haversack for each member. Recruits poured in and training had to be organised. It soon became clear that the first duty would be to transport wounded soldiers from the station to the first Eastern General Hospital. No ambulances were available, so a list of motor lorries and spring vans, which could be used for transport was made and the detachment carpenters were set to prepare fittings of larch poles, which could be inserted and used to sling the stretchers. One ambulance was available and in a quite creditable time the train was cleared and the men safely conveyed to Neville's Court at Trinity College. During the war the Detachment met 106 trains and unloaded 12,516 cases. It soon became clear that the War Office had nothing more heroic for them than the unloading of wounded at Cambridge Station so that the great majority of the original members of the detachment transferred to the R.A.M.C. and to combatant units and their place was taken by an excellent body of older men from the University Press. As the requirements of the Military Service Acts became more and more stringent men previously exempted were continually being called up for the army and in the end, the Detachment consisted for the most part of lads under 18 and men over 40. In July 1915 Wordsworth Grove Red Cross Hospital was opened and assistance was willingly given. There was no fancy nursing or bandaging included in the duties which consisted for the most part of scrubbing and washing up. There was also the bathing of the patients, as a special treat and occasionally the carrying of a patient from the operating theatre to the wards as a giddy pinnacle of excitement. Exalted social position was no bar to membership but it carried no exemption from the most menial duties. Every member did his bit once a week and a member of the University 'washing up', or a prominent local dentist or laying and serving breakfast were by no means uncommon sites. Then there was air raid duty:Few in Cambridge knew how elaborate were the preparations made for their succour and treatment if an air raid had chanced to develop. On many occasions, little bands of men were posted throughout the town with first aid appliances and a motor ambulance service was ready. Nor were the surroundings in these aid posts always of the cheeriest. On one occasion the night had to be spent sitting around an empty coffin in the workshop of our local undertaker. Thus first and last aid work equally available. All through the war new recruits were being trained. Several old members of the detachment made the Supreme Sacrifice. At the end of his article Alex Wood wondered what would come next: "What the future holds it is difficult to say. But we are carrying on and if we are wanted in peace or in war we shall be ready" 19 09 24b # c.21.4 # c.21.1 # c.45.5

Tar and Feather Court Martial. Sentence was promulgated at Cambridge on Saturday in the recent "Tar and Feathering" court martial. The court found Lt. Wright guilty of the offence and sentenced him to be reprimanded. Lt. Wright, who received a message over the phone from the A.P.M. that the finding of the court had been sent on from Eastern Command, arrived at the A.P.M, offices in Regent Street about midday. In the presence of Major Minchener, O.C., 6th Company, Royal Fusiliers (to which company Lt. Wright was attached for the purpose of the court martial) the finding of the court was read out by Major Braithwaite-Wallis. Both officers shook hands with Lt. Epidemic Among Pigs. The March district has been unfortunate in an epidemic of sickness among pigs and there has been considerable resultant mortality during the past few weeks. The sickness spread among the animals at rather an alarming rate, chiefly on the west side of the town, and swine fever has been ascertained as the cause of death in some cases. The illness is now abating. Cambridgeshire is free from swine fever and the healthy state has been in existence for everal months. The March epidemic has not in any way affected Cambridgeshire. 19 09 24 CIP

Rail Strike. The action of the N.U.R. Executive in forcing on the country, without warning, a national railway strike, bound up as it is with so many evil consequences and endangering the country's food supply, met with universal condemnation in Cambridge, as indeed it has throughout the British Isles. The situation is being met with calmness and fortitude. Cambridge railway station went to sleep on Friday night at the behest of the N.U.R. Goods traffic and perishable articles were held up, cattle suffered similarly and the mere man in the street was faced with the necessity of arranging his own transport if he wished to get home during the week-end. Four or five passenger trains were handled at Cambridge on Saturday. About 90 per cent of the men are out. A few trains have been run daily during the week. The Divisional Superintendent of Operations said a large number of Cambridge civilians had volunteered for service on the railway. The strike affected the gas supply and postal services and food rations were reduced to the following amounts: Meat 1s. 8d. worth per-week, bacon 6 ozs. sugar 8 ozs. butter 1 oz, margarine 4 ozs, lard 2 ozs. An old lady walked ten miles on Saturday to fetch margarine. Coal deliveries were restricted to deliveries of one cwt. # c.32.5 # c.26.2

Railway Strike Ends. The railway strike terminated on Sunday after an existence of nine days. Speaking generally, Cambridge felt but little ill effect from the national railway stoppage. Volunteers and loyal employees carried on a skeleton passenger service and voluntary effort in connection with road transport proved an invaluable asset in the movement of food supplies for the community. Travellers were incommoded, the public generally showed annoyance and anxiety in turn, and the man in the street exercised a Briton's privilege of "grousing" and carrying on the best he could, Cambridge railway employees returned to work on Monday, and about 8 a.m. 500 of the strikers marched to the station to report for duty. Others arrived in the course of the day, but owing to some misunderstanding in connection with the re-instatement of certain labour, the goods operatives declined to resume work. A deputation waited upon the local railway authorities and subsequently returned to the strike headquarters in Devonshire Road. Here the goods men were told to report for work next morning, the difficulties having been overcome. The men received the instruction with general pleasure, and one enthusiast called for cheers for the "brothers" who had settled the matter. A member of deputation discountenanced any form of demonstration, and the men dispersed quietly. # c.32.5 # c.26.2

Disbanding the Women's Land Army.
The Land Army will be disbanded by November 30th by which time the potato harvest should be gathered in. The 8000 women who remain will be encouraged to remain as employees of the farmers in the ordinary way. The women have been quick to learn all sides of farming operations, they have been specially successful as milkers, and in charge of stock. Starting as they did in the face of such prejudice or scepticism the women of the land army have won the gratitude of their employers and the admiration of the country. The first recruits were enrolled in March 1917. Since that time 23,000 have been selected and placed. The uniform has given complete satisfaction and one complete outfit has been issued every 6 months. Two awards of merit have been inaugurated for exceptional skill in such unaccustomed work for women as driving tractors. The extraordinary way in which these women have adapted themselves to this unusual work is impressive and there are many ploughwomen who with tractors have ploughed more acres with less petrol than any man in their county 19 10 10(2) ES

Horning pigeons, which had done useful work as message carriers in the naval and military pigeon services during the war, had recently been wantonly shot, and a strong protest was made by the local owners at the annual general meeting of the Cambridge and District Flying Society on Saturday evening. The National Homing Union have had the matter of this destruction of the birds under consideration for some time, and the co-operation of the public is sought in connection with their protection. The drainage of almost half a million acres of land, extending through 10 counties is covered by the Draft Order for the Ouse Drainage District which has been formulated by the Board of Agriculture and Fisheries. It provides for establishment of the single drainage Board, which will take charge of all the main channels and banks of the Ouse and its tributaries from Buckinghamshire to Kings Lynn. An enquiry was held at Cambridge Guildhall. The Commissioner said it had been the opinion of many skilled engineers and people with the knowledge of agriculture and drainage that in order to get this extremely fertile part of England well administered from the point of view of artificial drainage it was highly advisable that there should be a single drainage board. Under the general law applying to sewers and drains no land could be rated for the purpose of the works of drainage authorities unless that land derived benefit from the works of that authority.It was an attempt to pull together legislation, which had been carried on in a piece meal manner for the last 300 years. Unless some general and comprehensive scheme of the administration was arranged the drainage of those valuable land would not be adequately dealt with. All the old powers of the various drainage bodies would be transferred to the new one. But Littleport and Downham District said the scheme was so hopelessly bad that it could not be worked. 19 10 22f; conclusion – 19 10 29c # c.29

Wholesale thefts of Government property were described at the Shire Hall, Cambridge, on Saturday morning, when four prisoners were charged with stealing bedding, bedsteads, and various other articles the property of the Ministry of Munitions. In the corridors outside the County Divisional Police Court were heaps of blankets, sheets, pillows, bed ticks and iron bedsteads, and inside the court was another miscellaneous collection of articles, which were exhibits in the case. The bulk of the property was stolen from the Coprolite Works at Trumpington, but a number of the articles had been removed from, the munitions works at Gretna Green, and conveyed by the prisoners to Trumpington. Married men who were employed at the Coprolite Works were permitted to bring their families to live in the huts at the works. The goods were stolen from a store hut practically next door to the hut in which the accused lived. The wife had called at the Red Lion, Trumpington and asked the landlord if he would buy some blankets. She said she had kept the huts on Hauxton Road and let lodgings, now people were leaving the district she had a surplus supply. But Army blankets were a kind of their own and nobody had a right to sell them without authority. Three of the prisoners were sent to gaol. Publican fined for drunkenness. Before the Cambridge justices on Monday, a local publican was charged with being drunk and incapable at St. Andrew's Street on December 7. The offence was admitted. A constable said he saw him coming down the street from the direction of the police station. He was staggering and fell down is the middle of the road. Had he (witness) not rushed and stopped a motor car, defendant would have been run over. A fine of 5s was imposed.

Histon Church Clock.—"Parishioner" writes: "May I be allowed to call attention to the old church clock? Residents, chiefly those living and working at the Church End, do miss and more than miss the old clock striking out the hour which has always been a great boon and convenience. The clock and, if necessary, the wherewithal would be raised in less than a trice. If the churchwardens or responsible authorities could remedy this small matter it could doubtless be put in order, many would be grateful 19 12 10 CIP

Glamour of an old sword. Three schoolboys were summoned at a Juvenile Court at Cambridge Guildhall for committing damage to property to the amount of 25s. Defendants pleaded guilty. A constable stated that in consequence of a report about damage having been done to a garden seat and the pavilion on Alexandra Gardens, he made inquiries, and subsequently saw the defendants one of whom said, "Yes, I did it when I left Sunday School. We did it with an old sword that we had hid under the bushes in the Alexandra Gardens." The Mayor said they had decided not to convict the boys, but they thought they had been very naughty boys. They, with their parents, would be bound over to be of good behaviour for six months, and they would have to pay the costs - 10s 8d each. As a sequel to this case, a fourth schoolboy was summoned for stealing the sword, valued at nine shillings. The Mayor reprimanded the boy, and said he must be a good boy in future. Gales at Bottisham. One of the worst gales of late years occurred at Bottisham on Thursday evening. Much damage was done at the outlying farm of Mr. Tebbit, situated on the Old Field Road. Here four mustard stacks in a row of six were completely overturned and their contents scattered in every direction, involving a considerable loss. At Bendyshe Hall, Mr. Bedford's shop and at the residence of Mrs. F. E. Newman, much damage was done by falling .masonry. A garden wall at Bottisham Place was levelled to the ground. Rain for a short time fell in torrents, and was accompanied by thunder and lightning.

A Real Peace Christmas. Quite the old Christmas spirit — absent during the terrible years of war — seemed to prevail everywhere this Yuletide, our first real Peace Christmas for five years. The only noticeable change from pre-war festivals was the dwindling popularity of Christmas cards, small gifts apparently taking their place. Another feature was the exceptionally large number of carol parties who went round this Christmas collecting on behalf of benevolent and philanthropic objects. Most church choirs organised parties and the response met was most generous and encouraging. More than ever, the festive season appealed to the children. It was the first Christmas upon, which many had had their fathers home with them during the period since the war broke out. The delights of Christmas shopping, or the rollicking Christmas parties, and of Boxing Day visits, were never the same when "daddy was away," and with him home again everything tended to make the present occasion the happiest of their lives. 19 12 31 CIP

Fighting Man. The actions of George Pilgrim, aged 23, of Histon Road, Cambridge, were the cause of the assembly of a large crowd in St. Andrew's Street on Saturday night. Pilgrim first took too much to drink and then took off his coat as a preliminary to his persuasion of the fighting element in the crowd to try conclusions with him. Constable Orriss came upon the scene, and hustled the young man into the lock-up. The martial spirit did not immediately subside, however and Pilgrim gave vent to his feelings in the cell, knocking out one of the windows! At the Borough Police Court on Monday, Pilgrim pleaded guilty to being drunk and disorderly in St. Andrew's Street, and also to doing five shillings worth of damage to a cell window at the police station. P.c. Orriss and P.c. Barrell proved the cases, and Pilgrim's father said this was the first trouble he had had with his son. The young man was recently demobilised from the Army, and is at present following no occupation. Pilgrim was bound over to be of good behaviour for twelve months, his father consenting to become a surety.He was further ordered to pay for the damage to the cell window, and 4s. in respect to the cost of the bond.

University Servants. We are all keenly alive to the domestic service troubles at Cambridge (University) within and without \ college walls, but I am informed that they are a good deal more acute at Oxford, where no female labour is admissible. Oxford college servants, like those at Cambridge, have sprung a Trades Union upon an astonished and bewildered University. Presumably a satisfactory arrangement has been come to here, as no one has heard more of the rumblings of the revolt which threatened during the Long Vacation, but at Oxford they have the whole of the thorny and difficult road to tread. # c.32.5

Motoring Boom. the great revival which has occurred in British motoring is disclosed by the records of' new members joining the Automobile Association. During the first week of the new year 1.015 new members were enrolled; the full significance of this figure will be realised when it will be remembered that during the winter motor vehicles are used less than at any other season of the year. During the first week of 1914, when motor vehicles were easily obtainable at a pre-war cost, and were considerably less expensive to run and. maintain, new A A, members numbered 288. The 1,015 motorists have joined in the corresponding week in 1920, when cars and motor cycles are realising abnormal prices, and are difficult to obtain, augurs well for the growth of motoring in Great Britain, especially when the vexed problems of "production" are solved # c.26.48

"A Guide to Cambridge University Life," by "Two of 'Em" (Cambridge: Deighton, Bell and Co., 1s. 3d. net) — The preface gives the raison d'etre of the guide in the following words: "For some it has been impressed on our notice that a small book of the type which we have produced here would meet a great demand and would be of use of members of the University, and also to visitors of the town. We have so often heard the question asked "Where is the —- College ground?" or "Where is the----- Laboratory" and in most cases it has gone unanswered because the answer was not known. This "Guide to Cambridge University Life" (we claim) will dispense with all trouble of this sort, and will enable its owner to find his way about by himself without any assistance. We have collected the information which seems to us to be that which everybody wants to know; and we have tried to furnish particulars dealing with both work and sport.-" A careful reading leads us to say that it would be practically impossible to compress more admirably the mass of information contained in this small volume. Whoever "Two of 'Em" may be, they have given to the public, and University men in particular, details which are of immense value, and set out in a most attractive manner. The plan of

Cambridge is by far the clearest and fullest we have seen of its kind, practically every place of interest to the undergraduate being set out, whilst the plan and key of laboratories and museums meets a long-felt want. Its size is no criterion of its contents and importance, and we commend it very warmly to all those for whose benefit it has been written and compiled. # c.46.4

Agricultural Wages.—A special meeting of the Agricultural Wages Board, Sir Ailwyn Fellowes presiding, was held on Friday for the purpose of further considering the question of increasing the present wages for agricultural workers. After prolonged discussion it was decided to refer for the consideration of the District Wages Committee, in the first instance, a draft proposal to increase the minimum rate of wages at present in force for all male workers of 21 years of age and over throughout England and Wales to 42s, with a minimum increase of 4s. The effect of this would be, in areas where the minimum is now 36s, 6d., 37s., 37s. 6d., or 38s., to raise it to 42s., and in areas where it is now higher than 38s. to raise it by 4s. in each case. A further meeting of the Board will be held on Friday, 5th March, for the purpose of considering the report from the District Wages Committees.

Glasses Stolen—At the Cambridge Police Court yesterday (the" Mayor presiding'), two spinsters, aged 52 and 50 were summoned "for stealing two glasses value 2s 6d, the property of Lawrence Charles Jakes, on February 22nd. Mr. Jakes who is the licensee of the Bentinct Arms, Castle Street, said the two defendants were in his house on the night in question. After they left he missed two glasses and reported the matter. He did not desire to press the case, but wished it to be a warning to others, as licensed holders had lost so many glasses. P.c. Rawlinson spoke to one of the women in question on the following day and questioning her about the glasses. The defendant said "The other woman took them off the counter and put them in her pocket I said they would miss them, and she said they would not" When he saw the other woman she denied touching the glass but said she knew the other woman took them. He found the two glasses at the first wo-man's house. The defendants who told the Bench they took the glasses "in a joke", were fined 3s each.

Encounter with Lioness. We hear from British East Africa that Lieut, Fletcher Frost, of West Wratting, who has a Government appointment out there as a Forest Ranger, when riding alone (which in the bush is considered hazardous and dangerous) encountered a lioness well known as being dangerous to mankind. His horse suddenly bolted, and looking to the offside, Mr. Frost saw the lioness approaching; in a moment it had seized his horse. Mr. Frost Slipped off on the near side, the lioness's claws passing over his foot, into the horse, dragging it down after describing a half-circle, and then killing it. Mr. Frost, contrary to his usual practice, had left his rifle in camp two miles distant. At sunset, he, with his rifle, was watching for the lioness to return to its prey, and sure enough it came, and received a bullet wound from the rifle, but in the dense forest it escaped, and his native followers were unable to penetrate the bush. Had Mr, Frost a longer coat on he too would probably have been drawn down with the horse

Kicked by Horse.—-A horse-keeper, aged 27, in the employ of Mr. Ashcroft met with a serious accident on Sunday morning. It appears that he was attending an unbroken colt when the animal kicked him under the jaw, inflicting a nasty injury to the throat He was conveyed to Addenbrooke's Hospital with all speed and has since been lying in a critical condition. Ex -Service Men,—A sum of approximately £2,000 is available for the social welfare of ex-service men in Cambridge. The money is part of the Army canteen profits, of which the sum of £1,500,000 has been earmarked to be devoted to this purpose throughout the country, each area to receive its due proportion at the rate of 5s. per ex-Service man residing within its borders. On first sight the utilisation of this money may appear a simple matter. The task has been placed in the hands of a committee representative of the Federation, the Comrades, and the "unattached" but before any scheme can be decided upon absolute unanimity has to be obtained. And here some slight difficulties have been experienced. Whilst the establishment of a United Services Club, using the £2,000 as a nucleus, has been greatly favoured, this had perforce to be turned down in consequence of a minority on the committee being opposed to the idea. A suggestion at present under consideration is the erection and endowment of two almshouses for ex-Service men.

Mr. James Quincey and Mr. J, Abrahams replied. Subsequently the toast of "Those we miss" was reverently acknowledged. Mr, Meaden committed on the fact that during the war every eligible man employed by the Society joined the Colours. Cycle Locks. For a good many years Cambridge has suffered from the depredations of the cycle thief, despite the vigilance of the police and numerous convictions of offenders. At a time when a bicycle is such an expensive Item, and thieves are as active as ever, the invention of a simple lock has corns as a great boon to cyclists and motor cyclists. A well known Cambridge scientific engineer—Mr. O. W. Hallen, of 58a Bridge Street —gave some thought to the matter, and he has devised a simple invention which will readily command itself to owners of bicycles and which should effectively reduce the number of thefts of machines from the streets. The lock is a permanent attachment to the cycle or motor-cycle, and when it is thrown into action it prevents the rotation of the wheels. The device consists of a clip to fix on the forks of a bicycle, and a moving lever secured by a padlock. When the bicycle is left unattended the lever is pushed inwards towards the wheel and locked. It is then impossible to ride the machine, as the lever obstructs the spoke of the wheel. When the lever is withdrawn by the rider it does not interfere with the free movement of the spokes. Small and unobtrusive, Mr. Hallen's device weighs but a few-ounces, and is practically stamped from one piece of metal. A thief could neither unscrew it nor break it without the use of extreme force, and as the lever will probably be case hardened when produced on a larger scale, it will be almost impossible to file through it. The device should not prove expensive, and the largest item will lie in the cost of the padlock selected by the cyclist himself. Mr. Hallen is at present negotiating with several large firms of cycle accessory makers for mass production of the device on a large scale. # c.26.485

Residents in the neighbourhood of Dimock's Cote are desirous that the road on either side of the river may be connected with a bridge. The Military constructed the road during the war to carry military traffic towards the East Coast. A pontoon bridge was erected but this has now been removed and although there is an excellent road on either side of the river at this point there is no means of crossing the river. The County Council have considered the question and report that two tenders have been received for the construction of a bridge over the Cam and over the Old West River. But the population of the district was not likely to increase and they could not see any reason for the vast expenditure. Lieut-Col Tebbutt said the road was more important to the eastern counties than to Cambridgeshire. It connected Norfolk and Suffolk with the Midlands and he could not see why the County Council should be expected to provide a large sum of money in respect to the bridge. While it was desirable it is not an urgent matter. But the District Councils have made the road up to Main Road standard and there had been an understanding that the County would erect a bridge. It was in the interests of agriculturalists and the absence of a bridge a real difficulty. It was agreed to negotiate with the Ministry of Transport with a view to getting a grant towards the cost. 20 04 21c

New Road. A proposed road in Cambridge, which new will relieve the pressure of traffic in Silver Street, was described at a meeting of the Cambs. County Council on Saturday. The Town Council had written to the County authorities stating that they proposed to promote a Bill in the ensuing session of Parliament, and that they would be prepared to insert a clause providing for the construction by the County Council for a by-pass road from the Barton Road to Hills Road, with the necessary bridges. The Roads Committee of the County Council considers that such a road would he a desirable improvement, and the County Surveyor, the County Architect, and the Borough Surveyor are to confer with a view to preparing a plan showing the suggested links for the proposed new road, together with an estimate of the cost. Alderman J. Q. Vinter said that the time had come when there should be proper communications between these districts. Councillor W. L. Rayners observing that the scheme might not be clear to some members of …. It consisted of a road starting at the corner of the Barton Road, next to the Caius Ground, going down .over a sort of drift way towards the bathing sheds at the bottom of the Lammas Ground, which the Borough bought a little while ago, then across some private land reaching the river.There was a bridge, and over that bridge the road would join on the Pemberton Estate and link up with Chaucer Road, then reaching the main London road. It would then turn back a little way to the bridge over the Brook, joining up with Brooklands Avenue. It would make a main by-pass road which would avoid the necessity of using Silver Street, a main road with a bridge which was often dangerous for the traffic. The County Council agreed that the Town Council should be asked to insert a clause to the proposed bill 20 04 21a # c.49.6

Li-Col. Clayton's promise. Lt-Col. M. C. Clayton, D.S.O., D.L., is about to carry into execution a promise which he made on the occasion of the reunion of the Cambridgeshire' Regiment. The commanding officer then said that when the Territorial Force was reconstructed he would "stump the county" if necessary to re-enlist the support of those who had fought with him on the Continent. The popular colonel will preside at a recruiting meeting to be held in the Drill Hall, East Road, Cambridge, on Friday, May 7. All old members of the battalion whether warrant officers, N.C.O.s or men, are cordially invited to meet Col. Clayton on that occasion. The gathering is fixed for 7 p.m. It should be noted that in accordance with a recent Army order, men with slight war disabilities who are considered, medically fit otherwise may be enlisted in the Territorial Force on the authority of a medical officer

Remarkable discovery. A remarkable discovery has been made at Cambridge during the past week. On Friday last, while a number .of workmen employed by the Cambridge Electric Supply Company were engaged in digging operations in Midsummer Common, near Forth Terrace, one of the men came across a human skull. The police were immediately communicated with, and at about 2 o'clock on Monday, a small number of plain-clothes officers proceeded to the spot, and after about an hour the remainder of a skeleton, practically intact, was unearthed. The bones were carefully removed, placed in a box and then conveyed to the police station. The skeleton, which is that of a woman, was barely a couple of feet below, the turf, and the medical opinion is that it had been laid there for probably over 50 years. # c.41

Dangerous Driving Epidemic. A number of undergraduates appeared at Cambridge Police Court on Friday to answer summonses in respect to their alleged Dangerous driving of motor vehicles in the town. A stern magisterial warning was given by Alderman A. S. Campkin the chairman of the magistrates, and the driver's licence of one of the offenders was suspended for a month. Alderman Campkin said that there was quite an epidemic of furious driving by motor cyclists, who were greater offenders than the drivers of motor cars. The epidemic seemed to have broken down again, and some strong effort would be made to prevent it if possible. Motor cyclists were racing up and down the streets. There were dangerous corners and dangerous cross streets in the town, and some people felt that it would be desirable to make some regulation to restrict the pace of motor vehicles to 10 miles an hour. Such a regulation would have a salutary effect.

Special Constables, — At the Cambridge Divisional Bench on Saturday the following special constables were re-sworn: Messrs. Charles Careless, Harold Davies, Peter Grain, Benjamin Kent and Lewis Smith. The chairman (Mr. W. W. Clear) thanked the special constables for the assistance they had rendered to the police in the past.

Appointment. At a meeting of the County War Pensions Committee, held at Cambridge on Saturday, candidates for the post of cashier and accounts clerk were interviewed. Six applicants appeared before the Committee and ultimately the appointment went to Mr, G, B. Hosegood, of 89 Mill Road, Cambridge, who prior to the war was cashier and ledger clerk at Messrs. Matthew and Sons, Trinity Street. Subsequent of demobilisation he has held the position of finance officer at the local Employment Exchange. 20 05 05

Steeplechase Cups Stolen,—During Sunday night three houses on the London to Newmarket Road, in the neighbourhood of Fulbourn and Wilbraham, were broken into and thefts of a more or less extensive character perpetrated. In the first instance a house known as Worsted Lodge was entered via a window after forcing back the catch, and two old watches were stolen. All the doors of the various rooms in the house were locked, so that the thief only gained access to the first room. During the same night the house on Shardelowes Farm, Fulbourn was entered in a similar manner. The only thing taken, however, was a locked cash-box containing papers, and it is somewhat significant that a number of plated articles were left untouched. In the third case the house of Mr. George Long, of Wilbraham, received attention and here the nocturnal marauder or marauders made a more substantial "'haul," a number of silver steeplechase cups, silver spoons, rose bowls, and other household silver being carried off. Here, again, plated articles were ignored. The three houses are all within a radius of three miles, and each stands in an isolated position. The County Police authorities have the matter under investigation.

Telephone Kiosks. The Borough Council will tomorrow be asked to approve of the erection of telephone kiosks under the shelter at Hyde Park Corner, and near Sidgwick Avenue (or the side of Queens' Road). Suggested sites on the Newmarket Road (near Abbey Road) and on the public footpath on Mill Road (near Catharine Street) have failed to secure the approval of the Paving Committee, and in the former case the Borough Surveyor has been asked to select a suitable position in Sun Street, whilst in the latter the Post Office authorities have been requested to obtain another site on private property. The attention of the Post Office authorities is to be drawn to the need of a kiosk in the Cambridge Without District and a request made for the erection of one at the junction of Cherry Hinton … # c.27.75

Stable fire. Three farm horses were burnt to death in a fire which broke out at 10 p.m. on Friday in the stables of Crawcutts Farm, Histon. This is the breeding place of Messrs. Olivers' herd of middle white pigs, but fortunately the herd was uninjured. The origin of the outbreak is unknown. The buildings were constructed in wood which had been tarred and creosoted, and they were quickly destroyed. The harness room and one or two small outbuildings were also burnt out, and large quantities of straw bedding blazed furiously. Thirty pigs and a valuable horse were rescued from the danger zone but efforts to remove the three farm horses were unavailing. The fire engine from Messrs. Chivers' factory was taken to the scene of the outbreak, and within a short time firemen and volunteers had the conflagration well under control. Within an hour the fire had been completely extinguished.

Theatre. Next to Stevenson's inimitable stories of the Oceanic Islands, or Joseph Conrad's wonderful tales of the Malay and the South Seas," The Bird Of Paradise," takes rank among the best. The scenes are laid in the Hawaiian Islands, and are very beautifully staged. The storm in the first act is among the most effective things of its kind. "The Bird of Paradise" is one of Macdonald and Young's best productions, and should find a big public in Cambridge next week,

Police Promotion. Sergeant Clerk Evans, of the Headquarters of the County Police, has recently been promoted to the rank of Inspector and Chief Clerk. Inspector Evans joined the force at Cambridge on July 4th, 1904 and on May 1st, 1919 was promoted to Sergeant. Since that date he has been doing the Chief Clerk's work which carries with it the rank of inspector. He has discharged his duties in that capacity to the entire satisfaction of the Chief Constable and his promotion is well merited. He has been a very hard working and painstaking officer. He has excellent abilities and on more than one occasion has been complimented by the magistrates on his astuteness. Inspector Evans has been stationed at headquarters during the whole of his career as a police officer.

Memorial Unveiled. The parochial war memorial in connection with St. John Hills Road, Cambridge was unveiled last (Tuesday) evening by Bishop Price, Archdeacon of Ely. The memorial, which was designed by Mr. A. P. Macalister takes the form of a tablet in the south wall of the chancel. Underneath the representation of a dove hovering over a field of battle, is a polished brass plate bearing the names of 45 men of the parish who fell in the war. The memorial is in Hopton Wood stone in early English style, and was executed by Messrs. Leyton and Leach. 20 06 03 # c.62

County War Pensions.—A meeting of the County War Pensions Committee was held at the County Hall, Cambridge, on Saturday, when Mr. E. Mellish Clark presided, and those present were: Lady Newton, Lady Walston, Mrs. J Brocklebank, Mrs. Brown, Dr. J. W. Ellis, Messrs. P. M. Ayres, W C. Bull. J. Diver, A. R. Fordham, P. G. Garrard, W. G, Hutchings, A. B. Jacobs, W. Randall, A. Tabrum and Mr. J. H. Thomas, with the Secretary (Mr. E. Cowell). Mr. Tabrum moved the adoption of the report of the Staff Sub-Committee, which stated that the resignation of the Chief Clerk. Miss K. R. Fordham, was received, and it was resolved, "That an advertisement be inserted in the local papers for a chief clerk to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of Miss Fordham, and that preference be given to an ex-Service man and a candidate possessing a knowledge of shorthand and typing." It was further resolved "That the Secretary be re-quested to ask permission of the Ministry of Pensions to allow the Committee to pay a salary of £182 per annum (the salary payable to a grade 1 clerk's.) In doing so, Mr. Tabrum said that the Committee owed a great deal to the devoted work which Miss Fordham had given during the long period of her association with the Committee. She started rather more than three years ago during the time he (Mr. Tabrum) was hon. secretary, and he knew from his own personal experience the great assistance which she had been. She was very quick and ready to grasp the complicated regulations, and grew as the work developed. The Committee should not accept her resignation without expressing their warm appreciation of her services. It was a compliment to Miss Fordham that the subcommittee recommended the appointment of a grade 1 clerk. Only a grade 1 clerk was competent to do the work which she had been doing. Miss Brown seconded, and the Chairman also associated himself with Mr. Tabrum's remarks. The report was adopted, it being agreed that the sub-committee interview the applicants for the chief clerkship and recommended not less than four for consideration by the Committee.

Sir George Fordham, whose name has been mentioned as the possible choice of the Cambridgeshire Labour Party at the next General Election, returned from the Continent last week. On Saturday afternoon the "Cambridge Chronicle" invited Sir George to express his views with respect to the County political situation, but the ex-Chairman of the County Council declined to be interviewed at this juncture. While nothing has been decided with respect to his candidature, Sir George Fordham readily admitted that he was spoiling for a fight and gave expression to his sympathies with Labour. He said that he regarded the Labour Party as 'the great motive power of the future."

Fruit Growers. The half-yearly general meeting of the West Cambs, Fruit Growers' Association was held at the County Hall Cambridge, on Saturday, when the proposed establishment of a new Horticultural Research Station was discussed. Mr. Gautrey remarked that if the Government wanted to establish this Research Station they should pat their own money down. They had wasted large sums of money not benefiting the community in the past and he understood that Wisbech fruit growers for their part did not intend to contribute anything towards this Station unless the Government took the initial step. On the motion of Mr. Langan it was agreed that no action be taken in this matter. Tendering his resignation of the office of secretary to the Association Mr. Sidney Smith said the Association had grown considerably since its formation and the work really demanded more time than he could spare. Mr, Smith was ultimately prevailed 1 upon to continue in office until the end of the year.

An unusual scene was witnessed outside the Senate House, Cambridge when a number of young graduates attired in evening dress and wearing bachelors' hoods over their gowns settled down to a game of marbles on the steps of the building. An old statue of the University permits its graduates to indulge in this enthralling pursuit on the Senate House steps but for many years no graduate has availed himself of the privilege. Saturday's players attended the Senate House to be admitted to their degrees and as soon as the ceremony was concluded they produced chalk and bottles and marbles and entered into a lively game on the top step of the southern exit from the building. Had they attempted the game before the ceremony a phlegmatic Proctor and his top hatted bulldogs with no doubt have put a stop to the proceedings. But having been admitted as graduates of the university the players were protected by a musty old law and they carried on with impunity. Marbles were a popular game at one time. The marbles themselves could be carried about so easily that at the 'elevens' past generations of Cambridge tradesman, having broken from business for refreshment, challenged neighbours and friends to try conclusions on the street pavements. The gutters ran with marbles and it appears that the University statute was framed in order that graduates might enjoy their contests in comparative privacy. A doctor in his scarlet robe could not with dignity flop down in Petty Cury and carry on a marble competition with any don who he chanced to meet. The cunning of the men of learning with the nimble glass alleys could not be revealed to the vulgar crowds of loafers and errand boys. So the sedate old Fellows went inside the Senate House railings and without interference or interruption– 20 06 23a, photo 23d # c.39 # c.36.92

Council Staff. The County Hall Committee has considered the resolution of the Cambs. County Council that the time has arrived when it is necessary to provide increased accommodation for the Council's staff. Sir Douglas Newton reported the result of an interview with the Bursar of Christ's College if they are prepared to sell Bene't House. The owners of the ground rents of the adjoining properties occupied by Mr. P. Morley and Messrs. Eaden Lilley and Co., Ltd., are to be approached with a view to the purchase of the freehold of the property, and Mr, Percy W. Gray. (Scruby and Gray) was asked to advise the Committee what offer they should make for the Riding School site, At a subsequent meeting the Clerk of the Council reported as to negotiations for ad-joining property, and submitted a valuation by Messrs. Scruby and Gray for the Riding School site. It was then agreed to recommend the County Council to authorise the Committee to make an offer for the Riding School site for the amount of the valuation. The Committee also resolved that the amount to be reported to the County Finance Committee as the sum likely to be required for capital expenditure during the next five years should be: Extension of County Hall, including site and equipment, £21,000.# c.35.1

Fire at March. — An outbreak of fire occurred at March on Friday morning, resulting in considerable damage being done to a building used as a motor garage, with hay loft above, in the yard of the White Hart Hotel, March. On the outbreak being discovered the Fire Brigade were summoned, arid Mr. Watenfield removed the horses and the motor cars. Capt. Bond was quickly on the scene, and with one of his men he connected hose with the hydrant on the Market Place, and soon had a jet of water playing on the fire. It was this prompt action which probably kept the outbreak in check and prevented it spreading to the adjoining buildings.

Permanent Officials. Strong protest against any unnecessary increases of the permanent officials of the Corporation at this time was made by Councillor E. V Johnson at a meeting yesterday (Tuesday) of the Borough Education Committee when a recommendation was brought forward by the School Attendance Committee that a third school attendance officer be appointed, that such officer be a woman, and that her commencing salary be £140 per annum. Mr. Johnson said that the Borough Council was threatened with very grave increases in the salaries of its officials, and he did not think this was a time when they should add to the permanent staff. They already had two school attendance officers, who were costing about £400 per annum, and he expressed the opinion that a third was not necessary. Mr. Starr strongly supported the views ex-pressed by Mr. Johnson that this was not the time to make unnecessary additions to their staff, and asked the question whether municipal officers were really putting their backs into things. The recommendation was approved by a majority to two, Mr. Johnson and Mr. Starr voting against.

A contribution of £1.000 has been made to Addenbrooke's Hospital, Cambridge, by Mr. Thomas Norman, of Shelby, Iowa, a former resident of Willingham, in appreciation of the splendid service rendered to Mr. Norman's family during their residence in England, at which time they were in a far from rich position. The gift was received by the hospital authorities through the agency of Dr. Kine of Willingham. Fifty years ago Mr. Thomas Norman's brother, Edmund, was a patient in the hospital, and the donation is given for the purpose of endowing a bed in his memory in the hospital. The donation has been invested in 3 per cent War Loan, and the interest will be a permanent addition to the annual income of the hospital. A brass plate will be provided recording the endowment of the bed. Mr. Will Norman, a cousin of Mr. Thomas Norman, is still resident at Willingham.

Dancing will wind up in what should prove an enjoyable and unique Bank Holiday function.

A remarkable film to be seen at the Victoria Cinema today (Wednesday) is the five-part drama, "The Two-Soul Woman, or Can a Devil and an Angel inhabit one body." Miss Priscilla Dean is seen in the chief character. Charlie Chaplin, funnier than ever, causes endless merriment in his impersonation of the floorwalker. Thursday. Friday and Saturday A fine romance, "Whims of. Society," will be shown, and a rollicking Sunshine comedy. ‘‘Her Private Husband," is sure to please.

The Women Magistrates. On the occasion of the members of the Cambridge and District Women Citizens' Association last (Tuesday) evening, pleasure was expressed at the appointment of women magistrates in Cambridge. The rally was held in the garden of Sidney Sussex College under the presidency of Mrs. Heitland At the outset, Mrs. Heitland said the association had taken its part in the consideration of important questions of the day, and the members were exceedingly pleased that local women had now been appointed magistrates for the administration of the law (Hear hear.). The Vice-chairman of the Association (Mrs. Keynes) was one of the new justices and another member who had been appointed was Mrs. Bethune Baker, whose work in the police court with Mrs. Hutchinson had been of so much value in the past (Hear, hear). Other women who had worked to advance the interests of women, children and the poor had also been appointed to the Bench, and were extremely gratified by the appointment of Lady Newton in the County (Applause). They hoped that other women would be associated with Lady Newton in the near future. The Chairman referred also to the work of women who had been elected to the local authorities, and to the splendid part which they had taken in connection with the housing problem. # c.34.6

Fire at Whittlesey. A fire occurred at the residence of Mr. Edward Hubbard, in Windmill Street, Whittlesey, at the premises formerly known as the Windmill Inn, early on Saturday morning. Mr. Hubbard was aroused by his daughter, who was awakened by a creaking noise in the chimney immediately adjoining the bedroom, and on inspection a beam was found, to be on fire. Mr Hubbard at once aroused the other inmates, and after throwing a few buckets of water on the fire, went for the Fire Brigade, who were soon on the spot and succeeded in getting the fire under control before it had made much headway.

Hotel sold. Considerable interest was taken in the sale conducted by Messrs. Chalk at the Lion Hotel, Cambridge, on Saturday afternoon, when the auctioneers offered for disposal the valuable freehold hotel, known as 'The Rock Hotel," Cherryhinton Road, Cambridge. The "Rock" is the only fully-licensed house in the district the nearest on the Cambridge side being three-quarters of a mile away and on the Cherry Hinton side a mile distant. The house was built 24 years ago, and is let to Messrs. Lacon and Co. (whose tenancy expires on October Inn next) at the annual rent of £175. The bidding was keen, offers coming from many parts of the room. The property was put in at £3,000 (offered by 'a well-known. local tradesman), and rapidly rose by bids of £50 to over £4.000. £25 bids carried the amount to approaching £5.000 and £20 bids to the final figure of £5.040. For this sum the property was bought by Mr. H. Ambrose, the licensee of "The Panton Arms" Cambridge. The auctioneers then offered the freehold house adjoining, known as "Ray Bert" Cottage, and this was purchased by the tenant, Mr. B. Jeffrey, for £700. # c.27.4

Agricultural Wages. At a meeting of the Agricultural Wages Board held on Thursday (Mr. Collingwood Hope, K.C.. C.B.E., presiding) the Board considered the objections received to their proposal to increase the minimum rates of wages for male agricultural workers of 21 years of age and over throughout England and Wales, together with the reports on the proposal made by the various District Wages Committees. With certain minor amendments, the proposal was confirmed as an order to come into operation on Monday, the 23rd August. The general effect of the Order is to increase the minimum rates of wages for adult male workers by 4s. per week throughout the country, with the result that the minimum rates for such workers will be 46s. in 19 of the District Wages Committee areas, and will range in the other 20 areas from 46s. 6d. up to 50s. 6d. in the cases of Northumberland and Durham. The Order is also for proportionate increases in the overtime rates.

Agricultural Returns. The preliminary agricultural returns show a reduction of 344,000 acres under wheat cultivation this year as compared with 1919, but an increase in barley acreage of 127,000, the highest recorded since 1914. Potatoes are being grown on a largely increased area, the total 544.000 acres, being 70,000 acres greater than last year. The area of sugar beet, about 3,000 acres, is about eight times as large as last year. Hops have risen 4,000 acres. A reduction of 10 per cent is shown in the total number of cattle but cows are still 90,000 more than in 1913, so there is ample breeding stock to replenish the herds of the country. Sheep have been largely reduced, and stand at 13,330,000, the smallest total ever recorded. Pigs have increased, especially in the number of sows, so that the prospects of further increase appear to be good.

Haystacks Burnt. As the result of a fire on the Old North Road, Royston two stacks belonging to Mr Haywood, and containing about 65 to 70 tons, the produce of 20 acres, were destroyed. The Royston Fire Brigade received a call, but the supply of water was very poor and practically useless for any effective purpose. In the adjoining field, and only a few yards away from the fire, there were shocks of corn standing, belonging to Mr. Andrew Pigg, and by the work of many willing helpers these were removed to a safer distance and watch kept to see that they did not catch fire, as lumps of burning hay were carried into the field by the wind. The fire is said to have been caused by two very little boys playing with matches near the stacks.

Football Season. Considerable activity is beginning to be shown in local football circles, prospects are being freely discussed and the opening of the season eagerly anticipated, With the harvest over more of the village clubs will be joining in the preparations to have all in readiness to give the season a good send off. Cambridge Town held a second trial match on the Trinity New Ground on Saturday evening, when several of the old players and some new faces were seen. Promising form was displayed by several of the men and the Committee should have little difficulty in selecting a string side to do duty in their opening match.

Competitions Revived. The revival of the annual competitions between the University and College Servants of Oxford and Cambridge promises to be of exceptional interest this week. There has been no trial of conclusions for eight years, and now that the inter-Varsity College Servants sports have been re-arranged the scope of the events has been extended in such a manner that the older members of the College Servants' Club may take their share in the competitions instead of figuring merely as supporters. Principal interest will centre, of course, in the eight-oared race between the representatives of Cambridge College Servants and those of Oxford. The recent Cambridge Town Bumping Races demonstrated the fact that College Servants 1, who are head of the River, are in a class by themselves, and some local rowing men …. to think that the boat …. off" slightly since the … certain that the Cambridge …. will give an excellent account of themselves on the … Rowing Club have following representatives ….burn (bow), 2 H. G Lane, 4 J. Doggett …, F. W. Pepper, 7 A. G. … Richardson (stroke), …. Spare man, H. P … and three are only … Oxford, all the other members having competed against Oxford in 1912. The cricket team will be selected from E. Laurie (captain), L. King, G. Wolfe, W. Manning, M. Bellamy, J, Richard son, E. Drury, F. Argent, G. Cockerton, J. Dilley, H, Edwards, T. Taylor, B. Gray and F. Fromant. The bowls team: S. D. Flack (captain), J. Hoppett. J. Collins, G. Lane, W. A. Maltby and F. Johnson — has given good accounts of itself in recent matches in Cambridge, and altogether the fixture should prove an enjoyable and interesting one. The crew left Cam-bridge yesterday (Tuesday) by the 7.37. They were accompanied by Mr. E. C. Steam, President of the Boat Club, and during the afternoon they did a little work on the river. The race will be rowed this (Wednesday) afternoon, and a dinner will be held at Oxford this evening. The cricket match will commence today (Wednesday) and continue until Friday, and the bowls match will take place on Thursday. The competitors in these matches will leave Cambridge on Wednesday morning, and will be accompanied by a large number of supporters.

Mayor. Once again the "Cambridge Chronicle" is able to be the first to announce the acceptance of the Mayoralty by the gentleman to whom it has been offered Coun. B. C. Jolley, of "Meadowcroft", old Chesterton, has accepted the position subject to the formal consent of the Conservative Party, to whom his name will be submitted as a matter of courtesy and according to custom. But it is practically decided that Councillor Jolley will succeed Councillor G. P. Hawkins in the Mayoral Chair. The choice of Mr. Hawkins' successor devolves upon the Liberal members of the Cambridge Town Council, the local arrangement of the parties providing for alternate nomination by Liberals and Conservatives of the occupant of the Chair. This understanding has proved highly satisfactory to all concerned, and has ensured the unanimous appointment of succeeding Mayors of Cambridge.

Meetings of the Liberal member have been held this week, and the invitation was according to Councillor Jolley. Mr. Jolley was elected a member of the Town Council in April. 1912, following the elevation of Councillor John Bester to the Aldermanic Bench. He has done a considerable amount of work on various committees of the council, but he seldom figures in the debates at meetings of the Corporation. Closely associated with the Nonconformist movement in Cambridge, Mr. Jolley is a prominent Wesleyan and holds office at the Old Chesterton Chapel. He has not taken a strong line in local party politics.

Price of Bread. The price of bread will be advanced probably to Is. 4d. per four pounds loaf with effect from 17th of. October next. Interviewed by a "Cambridge, Chronicle" representative yesterday, one of the leading Cambridge bakers said he would welcome the removal of the Government control in respect to flour. "It may tend to send up the prices a little at first," he said, "but this will soon reach their level. Fair competition between the bakers will soon bring the prices down. It's the only solution of prevailing difficulty as far as I can see." "What is the reason for the prospective rise in price" asked the reporter. "Well, the price of flour has been largely increased," was the ropy. "On Saturday flour was sold at 63s. 6d. per sack—that is 280 lbs. Today it is 86s., or an increase of 32s. 6d." "If the advance takes effect immediately as regards the price of flour, how does it happen that the price of the loaf remains stationary, until October 17th?" "We took stock of the quantities of the lower-priced flour which we held on Monday, and presented a return to the proper authorities," was the answer. "Alter we have exhausted existing stocks we make a claim on the Government, through the Food Control Office, for so many sacks of flour used in excess of the lower priced stocks between time that they are exhausted and the time that the additional charges for bread are made to the public. We do not get money in respect of this excess, but we are given a credit."

The Rev, Phillip H. Potter, Curate of Holy Trinity, Cambridge, has been offered, and has accepted, the living of St. John's, Carlisle, an important parish of 10,000 people, mostly railway workers. Mr. Potter has been at Holy Trinity since 1915, and during the absence of the Rev. E. S. Woods on war service in France was in charge of the parish. We understand Mr. Potter expects to take up his work at Carlisle early in October, and will preach his farewell sermon at Holy Trinity on Sunday evening next.

Sunday Work. When the Borough Watch Committee reported to the Town Council on Thursday that it had been agreed the annual inspection of hackney carnages should take place on October 6th and the examination of motor omnibuses on Sunday, October 3rd, Councillor P. J, Squires protested strongly against the latter part. He felt it his duty, he said, to utter his protest against the Council agreeing to work being done on a Sunday which could very well be done on a week day. He made an appeal to the Watch Committee that the examination of the omnibuses should take place on some other day than a Sunday. He knew he would be met with the suggestion that this was done as a matter of convenience, but he was going to put principle before convenience and make this special appeal. (Hear, hear). The Mayor: I promise I will bring your protest before the Watch Committee at their next meeting Mr Squires: Will you go further and promise that the day will be notified? The Mayor: I cannot do that, because the Watch Committee do as they like. We have no control over the matter. Mr. Squires said he would move the disapproval of the minute, and this was instantly seconded by Mr. G. Stephen. The Mayor: I simply move the reception of the minute. The Council have no power to alter this minute at all. 1 promise you I will bring it forward at the next meeting of the Watch Committee. Mr. Squires expressed his thanks and moved that the Watch Committee be requested to appoint some other day than Sunday. This was seconded in two or three places and carried nem. con.

Teachers' Pensions. The Cambridgeshire branch of the National Union of Teachers has urged the Cambs. Education Committee to put all teachers at the maximum salary of their respective grades on attaining the age of 55 years, as otherwise they will be penalised by having a poor pension when they retire, the amount of their pension depending on the average salary paid them during the last five years of service. The Education Committee yesterday adopted the recommendation of the Elementary Education Committee that they should not depart from the practice which now obtains — that of considering such cases on their merits.

Experiments with bats. The amazing facility with which bats avoid objects while flying in the dark has been explained in a number of ways. Very keen sight, an acute sense of touch, especially at the wing tips, or a sense of which we have no knowledge have all been suggested to account for this peculiarity. Experiments have been made by Dr. Hamilton Hartridge, of King's College, Cambridge, states the "Lancet-" to prove that that neither sight nor touch guides bats in their flight in the dark. On summer evenings pipistreile bats (a species of small bats common in Great Britain), 100 to 200 at a time, flew through open windows into rooms communicating by a door. When electric light was turned on they all flew in the same direction, but even when the light was turned off there did not seem lo be any collisions. Threads were placed in their paths and yet in absolute darkness, the bats neither collided nor touched the threads. In the darkness they could tell whether the door was shut, wide open, or .just sufficiently open for them to pass. The bats are believed to be directed by a special sense of hearing and by sound waves.

A stack fire occurred in the farmyard at the Queen Inn, Adelaide and had it not been for the promptitude of the Ely Fire Brigade, the Inn itself, which is a part wood structure, would have been destroyed. Immediately after a train passed Adelaide junction one stack was seen by the landlord's wife to be ablaze. Two nearby stacks within a few feet quickly became ignited and, aided by a strong wind, the flames rapidly reached alarming proportions. Employees of Messrs Aveling, painters and decorators of Ely, were engaged in the School close by and one telephoned from a signal box for the Fire Brigade. In the meantime volunteers were busy with buckets of water, but these were almost useless. Fortunately the fire was in close proximity to the river and within six minutes of their arrival the Brigade were quickly pouring volumes of water over the blazing stacks and all fear of the public house becoming ignited were soon dispelled. 20 10 08(2)ES.

Stack Fire. A large stack of straw, the property of Mr. J. W. White, smallholder and shopkeeper, of Stapleford, was on Thursday last destroyed by fire. The outbreak was noticed by a neighbour at about 3.30 p.m. seeing it was hopeless to try and save the stack the efforts of many villagers who congregated were directed to an adjacent stack of barley belonging to another person, which by dint of great perseverance they managed to save.

Cadets Fight fire. On Saturday evening as the members of the Linton Company of the Church lads' Brigade Cadets were assembling for inspection flames were noticed to be rising from a thatched cottage nearby and at once a rush was made, when it was found that the roof had been accidentally ignited by a small boy playing with fireworks. Two of the local Cadets scrambled on the roof and commenced pulling out the burning straw, whilst others gathered pails and formed a train, passing water thereby to a local gentleman at the head of a ladder. By these menus and aided by the lack of wind the little party of the C.L.B. lads and two local men were able to overcome the flames so successfully that by the time the fire engine arrived the fire was completely under control, and had been limited to a small portion of the roof. Naturally, after this experience, the lads were not quite up to inspection form, but allowance's were made by the Colonel, who stated that the line of uniformed lads silhouetted against the dark background carrying on the good work for which the Brigade was originally formed was in itself a sufficient proof that the Company was up to "inspection standard."

Pigs Sale. An important sale of pure-bred large white pigs from the herd of Messrs. Chivers and Sons Ltd. took place yesterday at the Piggeries, Histon, conducted by Messrs, John Thornton and Co. Fifty-eight pigs realised 1.843 guineas, the average price being £.32 17s. 10d. The top price realised was 75 guineas for Histon Lady Mollington 17th, bought for Lord Rosebery's "Dalmeny" herd. Mr. Fleming paid 70 guineas for Histon Belle, 20th. The prices were much below the sale in May last, but the industrial situation had a good deal to do with this, many buyers being prevented from attending. After the sale of the gilts the money given for the boars exceeded anticipations.

Women's' Institutes. The quarterly meeting of the committee and delegates of the Cambs Federation of Women's Institutes was held on Saturday afternoon. Mrs Jenyns (Bottisham) presided supported by Miss Briscoe (Cambridge) hon. secretary Miss Warrington (Waterbeach), the treasurer; Mrs. Haslam (Girton), the Fete secretary; Mrs. Bafnell (Little Shelford), Miss Stanton (Linton), Mrs. Sidney Fordham (Odsey), Mrs. Kellett the area organiser etc. The treasurer's statement showed there was a balance of £20 1s 6d for use during the first quarter of the year. It as decided to continue the rest room at Cambridge for the use of the members .The meeting considered the advisability of starting an Institute stall in the Cambridge Market. The chairman said a stall would not be available for two months and the cost would be 2s 6d a day. The hon. secretary said if the Federation got a better office in some public place they might have the produce on sale at the office. It was decided that the matter should be considered further at a later meeting. An interesting and Instructive lecture was given by Mrs Wootton of Girton College on 'High Prices." Mrs. Wootton said each time she had given a lecture she had spoken with increasing cheerfulness of prices coming down and now she thought she might say they were coming down. There were two chief reasons for high prices, viz there were not enough things, and there was too much money to buy those things. There was less coal mined and less steel made before the war, and these were the things upon which everything depended. Modern civilisation was built up on coal. There was certainly profiteering, but this could not be if there was enough to go round. It was no use having money unless there were things to buy. There were £350,000,000 of paper money in the country, and it was the increase of the money that had helped to send prices up. The money was only put into circulation because the Government could not get it any other way. The Government and the people of the country were really bidding for the goods. The country was now not only paying for imports but they had a surplus of £200,000.000 a year which helped to lower prices. The making of paper money had been checked. The Government was paying its way, and on the whole the two sides of the budget balanced.

Severe criticism of the dregding operations on the Lower Ouse between Denver Sluice and Wissey Outfall which have been carried on by the Ministry of Agriculture was expressed at the first meeting of the Ouse Drainage Board. They had spent £35,000 but their money had now been expended and they had determined the measures should now be stopped. No more work would be carried out except at the direct expense of the Drainage Board. Part had been spent on the Marsh Cut but that work was recognised as having been unsuccessful. The three Priestman dredgers and the tug which have been working above Denver Sluice would be offered to the Ouse Board. However Mr C.G. Tebbutt said the three dredgers were totally unsuited for work in the fens. Three had been sunk and one of them had been sunk twice. In some cases they drew the stuff to the wrong side of the river and it was probable that it would go back into the river again and do damage. There has been an enormous expenditure and very little work has been done. Mr E.R. Pratt asked the Board to continue the work at the Wissey River. The greater part of the work had been done and all that remained was a narrow neck the narrowest part of the Wissey, otherwise the money spent would be wasted. But Mr Oldman said he believed the work done had been completely worthless. The Board decided no more work would be carried out 20 11 03 # c.29

Chariot of Fire Rag. Everyone knew something was going to happen. By 7.30 there was a vast crowd on the Market Hill and a large band of students, arm in arm, were tramping around and around, singing and shouting and making the place ring with laughter. Not a solitary firework was discharged, not even the humblest little cracker. Not a lamp was extinguished - all was perfectly harmless innocent fun. Suddenly there was a move towards Peas Hill. Amid cheers and wild shouts of joy we had our first introduction to the Chariot of Fire. Openly it had been driven through the streets with the lamps alight and everything in order, just an ordinary old four-wheeler with hood up and nothing to distinguish it from the most innocent cab that ever stood upon a rank. But soaked with petrol tar and oil and with the interior filled with some highly inflammable material it needed but the flicker of a light to become a burning mass.Heralded with cries, the Chariot was dragged on to the Market Hill, the flames soaring high. There was one anxious moment during its initial journey when it came into contact with the curb and looked in imminent danger of over turning against the houses. But the danger was averted and the triumphal procession on the hill continued. Then amongst the thunderous cheers a war dance was performed around the blaze while from all sides firelighters and fireworks were showered on to it, more than one cap and gown being added to help feed the flames. From now onwards everything seemed to focus towards the Chariot which periodically was taken off on a tour of the neighbouring streets. Brought back again to the Hill there was a spectacular display of rockets, crackers, Roman candles, Catharine wheels and all manner and kinds of fireworks. And then having kept up its end for one over an hour and when showing unmistakable signs of collapse, the still blazing old four-wheeler was taken on its last journey. Away it went up Petty Cury leaving a train of burning fragments in the wake, along Saint Andrew's Street and into Regent Street.
Here a pile of scaffolding and hoarding proved too great a temptation for the many and soon it came crashing to the ground, a police constable being partially buried underneath the forming timber. Fortunately he did not sustain any serious injury.The mounted police and others were speedily on the scene and assisted by a number of university men they succeeded in extinguishing the fire before any serious damage was done. Thus ended the Armistice Day 'rag'.– 20 11 17e, f # c.36.93 # c.26.47

Chatteris man's invention. Accidents to railway passengers through the opening of the carriage doors while trains are in motion would be prevented by a new device which has been patented by Charles Dring of Chatteris. The invention relates to an improved arrangement for locking railway carriage doors on both sides of the train simultaneously by the operation of a lever on the engine. If desired levers can be provided in the guards van as well. Simple in construction device can be fitted to all kinds of railway carriages. Mr Dring, the inventor is an agricultural labourer and rootman but was formerly employed at the Chatteris Engineering Works. He has a large number of newspaper cuttings of accidents which would have been prevented had his system been in use. Continually seeing reports of people falling from trains while in motion he thought something ought to be done to stop the carriage door peril. He now claims to have invented an effective lock after years of experimenting. Mr Dring has been warmly congratulated by several well-known gentleman on his invention – 20 11 19 ES, WS

Bolshevism in Cambridge – Comrade Stewart, a bewiskered paid Bolshevik agitator and organiser of the Communist Party at meeting on Parker's Piece. He told his audience: Don't conceal the fact that you are all revolutionaries we are all Bolsheviks here. The working classes must rise up against the good, kind, patriotic, blood-leeches. vampires and tyrants: our bosses. Bloodshed or no bloodshed we want the way to power. If the capitalists won't give way then we will call out the Red Guards and the Red Police. We won't string them up to lamp posts because that would be a waste of good rope and good lamp posts. We will turn them out into the streets stripped and starved until they come to reason. The British Communist Party was in favour of the establishment of Soviet rule in England, the destruction of the present system of representative Parliamentary Government and the abolition of the Monarchy. He was questioned by an ex-officer who accused him of preaching revolution under a thin cloak of politics and being one of a gang of opportunists instigated to stir up trouble in Britain by foreigners. 20 12 01a

A grocer and his wife: separation order granted within a year of marriage ... unpleasantness occurred a few weeks after marriage. In July she purchased a motor cycle combination for £119. When she asked him to take her for a ride he struck her on the jaw. Husband said it was his wife's suggestion that he should have a sum of money and the motor cycle combination and go away from her up North again.

"I have told people repeatedly at inquests that they had far better buy an old orange box to use as a cot than let children sleep with their parents. People are very apt to smother them unconsciously". The mother said it was not a really strong child for it had a wheezing cold since birth on January 15th. She fed it on bread slops and the breast generally. The weight of the child was below average being 6lbs 3ozs against the usual weight of 7lbs for a girl, 8lbs for a boy. Death was due to natural causes.

Long-felt want supplied in Great Shelford. The hall is a converted army hut built on the public recreation ground. Great Shelford was to be congratulated in that its ex-Servicemen had joined with the Womens Friendly League to build the hall, a result which was eminently satisfactory for the village. If the ex-Service men were prepared to pull together for the places where they lived there was a great future for the county.

A motor ambulance to replace the old push ambulance which had been the only means the police had for dealing with street accidents and emergencies was presented by Special Constables.
The Commandant said that never a day or night passed but what the Cambridge police came across human suffering in one form or another. There had been a lack of provision to meet cases of sudden emergency when called upon to convey a sick or injured person to hospital or to their home.
All they had was a prehistoric ambulance more like an antiquated costermonger's barrow, with the proverbial tarpaulin jacket with which to wrap the patient in. When the 'specials' first mooted the idea of providing an up-to-date motor ambulance they met opposition but gradually subscriptions came in. Now the beautiful and complete ambulance would be placed at the disposal of the inhabitants of the town and also the county when required. The Chief Constable said the ambulance had been running since October and in that time they had conveyed 64 cases and covered some 700 miles. Accidents often occurred on the outskirts of the Borough and hitherto hey had to send two men and a push ambulance two or three miles. What grieved him more than anything was to see one day a dead body on that ambulance being conveyed through the streets of Cambridge and a few days later a child being taken along in full view of the public. – 22 02 15, photo – 22 02 15a # c.21.1

The employees of the firm of Messrs Robert Sayle & co. ltd spent a very enjoyable time together when they were the guests of the Directors at a supper and "social". The assembly took place in the furniture department at 15 St Andrew's Hall, which, thanks to the energetic efforts of Mr P. Norrington had been wonderfully transformed for the occasion. Screens, curtains & carpets had been used to excellent purpose and varied flags and coloured lamp shades enhanced the effect. Mr Chaplin (the veteran governing director) mentioned the first party he ever attended in connection with the firm was in 1866 when the late Mr Sayle had been in business for about 25 years. In those days things were very different. They had no Bank Holidays and no half-holidays except one, and that was Flower Show day when they closed at four o'clock. (Laughter). Business hours too were much longer. People often spoke of the "good old times" but "men could do a good deal more work then than many of us can do today"

Det-Constable Abbott presented his report (to the Borough Licencing panel). He said the trade in beer of the Bird in Hand, Newmarket Road, was better than that of the Hare & Hounds which was 107 yards away. The next nearest house was the Crown in Wellington-street. Charles Byatt, the tenant, said he had held the licence for about 20 years. He was quite satisfied with the living he was making. Arthur E.W. Payne, secretary for Messrs Bailey & Tebbutt said the house had been doing four barrels a week. John W. Pate, architect and surveyor said he had produced plans to rebuild the premises as soon as the company took over the house in January 1919. The work had not been done owing to the difficulty in getting tenders from builders through lack of skilled labour and materials. Joshua Charles Newman, a builder, said the best part of the local skilled labour had been commandeered by the Government for housing schemes. # c.27.4

On strolling along Kings-parade this morning we saw a crowd of undergraduates. Mingling therewith we became aware of the presence of a number of cyclists accoutred with hockey sticks. We divined then that a bicycle polo stunt was about to be "stunted". In short, it was a stupendous scheme schemed for the laudable purpose of brightening Cambridge. We waited a short time. Then cheers burst forth and the game (?) commenced. After wielding their weapons vigorously for about five minutes and hitting the "pill" (i.e. a spotless tennis ball), the players raised their battered and war-worn cycles aloft and to the accompaniment of cheers bore them tenderly to a place of safety. Motor 'buses, cycles and handcarts were enabled to get through the press by the help of the police. Ardour became somewhat damped until the ball was arrested by the police, when cheers once more broke forth, but the ball was remanded, and whence it flew we knew not. Thus ended the now customary end-of-term rag. Although not what it might have been it was amusing, which is one point in its favour # c.36.9

Robert James Odell, dealer, spoke to purchasing a dog from the defendant. Mrs Grace Bradshaw, Abbey-road, said that she purchased the dog from Odell for £1 and a horse bit. An inquest was held by the Borough Coroner on a boy aged five, the son of a bricklayer, who had died from diphtheria. The parents had not called in a doctor until it was too late. The father said the boy had been ill for the last week or so, and had been away from school. "I belong to the Peculiar People and we believe in faith healing – the laying on of hands and anointing with oil". On March 4th the boy appeared to be worse and could not get his breath easily. He sent his wife for the Doctor at midnight and while she was gone the boy collapsed in his arms and could not draw his breath. The doctor said that if one went out to every child that was unwell one would be out half the night. Next morning the mother called and told him the child was dead. The child's brother had been swabbed at school as there were cases there. Unfortunately deceased was absent from school then. The Coroner said "When a case like this occurs it not only affects the parents and their children, but it may have a very serious effect upon the whole town"

The most depressing feature of the County Council elections was the apathy of the electors. I ventured to prophesy there would not be many changes; actually there have been five. Of these Labour have gained four seats and thus make their first appearance on the County Authority. In each case their majority is well under 100, it is difficult therefore to draw any conclusion as to the strength of Labour in the county. Whilst I am not alarmed at Labour having a share in the representation on the County Council I regret the defeat of Mrs Dimsdale as it reduces the little band of women in the Council. Mr A.E. Stubbs, the Parliamentary candidate for the County has at last succeeded in setting his foot into local government work having turned the tables on Mr H. Edwards. After three defeats in Parliamentary, County Council and municipal elections he needed a little encouragement

A suggestion made by the Postmaster of Ely (Mr T.W. Bird) to dispense with the evening mail deliveries on Saturdays in order to provide a half-day holiday for the postmen did not find favour with the Ely Urban District Council. Mr Bird wrote asking the Council's sanction to the suspension of the 5.15 pm delivery, and mentioned that is was being done in many towns. He added that the particular delivery was quite an unimportant one for the articles for delivery were few. Mr C.H. Trimmer considered it was the wrong delivery to take off, as there was no delivery on Sunday. Rev T.J. Kirkland thought the week-end posts were in a "dreadful" state now and deliveries were most uncertain. He thought they could hardly agree with the suggestion unless the Sunday morning be reinstated. The Council agreed.

The County licencing meeting were told the White Horse Comberton was a fully-licenced house, the owners being the Star Brewery, Cambridge. The licensee had two children and also did other work as a canvasser for a window cleaning company. The annual rent was £5.00. The accommodation consisted of one tap-room - which was also used as a living room for the family, a parlour, a billiard room, a small bar, a cellar and four bedrooms. The landlord had suggested the house might conveniently be made into two cottages. There was no public lavatory accommodation. The trade of the White Horse for 1921 had been 46½ barrels and 37½ gallons of spirits. It was 106 paces from the Tailors Arms another fully-licenced and much better constructed house; there were at present three fully-licenced and one beer house in the village giving an average of 109 people to each licenced house.

An election always holds out the promise of excitement and although Cambridge is noted for its excitable nature and the present three-cornered fight (a by-election) has given plenty of opportunities, it has been one of the quietest elections on records. Cambridge awoke to an eventful day and even the least political-minded had the election forced on their notice by placards and photographs of the candidates in windows, on hoardings and on walls. Conservative enthusiasts had whitewashed "Vote for Newton" in two-foot letters on the pavements and were not particular where they did it. Perhaps the most noticeable were across the front door of the Central Liberal Club in Downing-street and it was not until mid-day that the inmates managed to erase the conflicting advice. The children have at least entered into the spirit of the thing and the old election songs to the tune of "Tramp, tramp, tramp, the boys are marching" have been dragged from their respective retirement. The candidates' names being all of two syllables have proved adaptable to the rhyme. "Vote, vote, vote for Mr Morgan (or Mr Dalton) have satisfied the requirements of the song whilst the trouble of Sir Douglas' one-syllable title have been overcome by referring to him as "Duggie Newton"

The Labour party is naturally jubilant at having doubled its vote since the last election despite the fact that many who voted for the Rev. The men at present receive 34s a week. Coun. Briggs said it was distasteful to sit there and listen to higher paid men saying 38s a week was enough for a man with a wife and family. I have never had any sympathy with the vicar of Thaxted in his determination to fly the revolutionary flags in his parish church, nor with the Cambridge undergraduates and others who conceived it their duty to pay frequent visits to the Essex village to tear down them down. Says the Vicar of Thaxted : "The battle of the flags would be more diverting if the opposition would put up some kind of intellectual fight but it is hardly possible to answer such arguments as liar, lunatic, pig, blasphemer, devil, even if the gentlemen who used them would remember to give their address. There is plenty of room in New Zealand for men & women who want to work and New Zealand wants them but has no use for undesirables, grumblers and the like. Wages are higher than at home, the cost of living is less and a man has more freedom: there are very few poor people. It is not his intention to persuade anybody who is in work but to help those who are unemployed by pointing out the chances of a decent living in New Zealand

Good Friday was quite the warmest day we have enjoyed this year. The call of the road held the strongest appeal and there was a continuous procession of motors, motor cycles and push bikes going out of Cambridge and going in. Country workers came into town in a steady stream and town workers seemed equally eager to invade the countryside. In Cambridge Parker's Piece had its traditional skipping devotees, and the first ice cream barrow of the year was in attendance in company with sweet sellers and a barrow with balloons, ticklers and paper toys without which no public holiday would be complete

The wartime procedure of dispensing with the chaperon is no longer tolerated in "polite society". For the chaperon times have altered considerably in the past eight years and at balls instead of sitting in state up a dais, bored to extinction, she takes her place among the dancers and combines with her duties as guardian pleasurable exercise. Owing to heavy taxation and general increased expenditure many women bearing titles and possessed of ancestral homes are glad to become professional chaperons

Following the example of last year the weather smiled on Good Friday, and wept spasmodically for the rest of the holiday. On Saturday holiday-makers were treated to a gale and on Sunday and Monday to typical April weather. There was rain, hail, sleet, wind, sunshine and more rain; the only thing that was lacking was fog. It was essentially an indoor holiday and there was hardly enough indoor amusements to go around. A few hardy souls worked on their allotments, but when a man is an enthusiastic allotmenteer, nothing short of an earthquake will stop him from digging

Impressive scenes were witnessed at the funeral of an Indian undergraduate. The funeral was carried out according to the Mohammedan ritual, and the interment was at St Giles' cemetery, Huntingdon Road, Cambridge. The coffin was conveyed in a hearse and was followed on foot by over 50 Indian undergraduates. Arrived at the cemetery the coffin was placed on the lawn at the entrance. Then several of the mourners, removing their shoes, conducted a short form of service, after which the coffin and mourners were photographed by an Indian student. The body was carried to the graveside and lowered by a party of the mourners. Nobody who was not directly concerned with the ceremony was allowed within 25 yards of the grave

Every year sees an increase in the number of people killed and injured on the roads, and the proposed abolition of the speed limit for private cars will not lessen the dangers of the highways. Although the speed limit of 20 miles an hour is habitually disregarded, it has some effect as a check on reckless driving, which will disappear when the evidence of the stopwatch can be ignored. It is the hired driver who has to suffer the penalties, but not infrequently the real offender is the owner of the car sitting inside. The majority of road motor accidents are due to excessive speed and it will be purely a matter of opinion what is excessive speed - Table Talk

We regret to announce that Lord Leopold Mountbatten, first cousin of the King, died at Kensington Palace on Sunday morning. Lord Leopold's schooldays at Wellington College were frequently interrupted by ill health, and his undergraduate career at Magdalene College, Cambridge, was marred by one severe illness. His sister, who had only then (1909) recently gone to Spain as a bride, hurried home to be beside him. An amusing story is told of one of her visits to him at Cambridge. He was seeing her off from the railway station, when an undergraduate from another college went up to him and said, "Jolly nice-looking girl that of yours; who is she?" "Oh, no one in particular", the Prince replied; "only my sister, the Queen of Spain"

The Cambridge Union Society debated the motion that Cambridge life is superficial and its traditions are to be deplored. Mr L.P. Bonnett (St Catharine's) denounced the air of compulsory boredom which characterised the average undergraduate. He thought it was quite time someone made a protest about the system of social intercourse, the whole round of social activity was so circumscribed by tradition it was possible to talk to a man for hours without really saying anything. He deplored the attitude of superior aloofness so prevalent in Cambridge and the conviction that it was not good form to be enthusiastic about anything.

A service of commemoration for the members of the college who fell in the war was held in the Chapel of Jesus College. Immediately after the service the memorial tablet was dedicated by the Lord Bishop of Ely. After a short service, the Master, amid a silence so intense that it could almost be felt, read the names inscribed on the memorial. It was an impressive scene - the clergy and choir in their surplices, row after row of gowned undergraduates, many of whom had also served, and a sprinkling of visitors from the outside world, all paying silent tribute to the 148 names read by the Master # c.62

The Mayor said that just after the war he was approached to act as trustee of a fund for purchasing a ground for the Town F.C. Without a suitable ground it was impossible to carry on for any length of time. He hoped the club would be successful, because it owed the bank something like £1,100 - but he was told a man thinking of big things was not a successful man of business unless he owed a considerable sum to the bank # c.38 : football

My readers will learn with great regret that Brooklands Avenue (Cambridge) with its countless romantic associations appears to be fore-doomed to destruction. The beautiful trees which provide the leafy tunnel which for generations has been so much admired are elms, and elms have an unpleasant habit of dismembering themselves with age. A good many of the trees must come down at once, as they are in such a decayed state to be liable to split and fall without warning. # c.18

Cambridge ruri-deaconal conference's housing committee was of the opinion that there still existed in Cambridge many slums which were a disgrace to a Christian community. The dirty and lazy habits of some of the people rendered nugatory any attempts to improve the conditions in which they lived. It would have occasioned very little surprise if, after the by-election it had been announced that Mr Hugh Dalton was not to stand again for Cambridge because it was felt that the Labour headquarters appreciated the work he had done here and would be likely to find him a constituency where there were greater prospects of Labour success than Cambridge offers. But his withdrawal from the field so soon after his acceptance of an invitation to contest the seat again has come as something of a bombshell to the rank and file of the Party.

Half a century ago Cambridge was notorious for its trading exclusiveness and backwardness. It was self-centred, localised, jealous of intruders and generally stuck-in-the mud. A vastly different state of affairs exists today. Local firms have developed or are springing up who are not satisfied with the seasonal trade and limited scope which Cambridge has to offer, but are seeking extensions of their business to wider fields and successfully competing in the open market with others. Generally there is a greater spirit of enterprise than was exhibited even 25 years ago. This, no doubt, has been due in part to the introduction of multiple shops, and the lessons that have been impaired by their very up-to-date proprietors # c.27.2

For three months of the year Cambridge is almost a deserted city and trade dwindles to a mere trickle; yet this town might, with a little effort on the part of the municipality and business people be made a most attractive holiday centre. Where can there be found another town only just over fifty miles from London and with four trunk railway companies serving it, which has such splendid openings for the provision of sites for the factories of industrial enterprises? We are still unenterprising here, and it is surely time we got a move on. The University can look after itself - "Table Talk"

Original "rags" in Cambridge are becoming few and far between, but there was something absolutely new this morning, when undergraduates treated their fellow-members of the University, and townspeople also to that rare spectacle - a film in the making - when there took place the filming of episode one of "The Supper Man". Shortly before noon we beheld a crowd seething round a lorry bearing camera men and some bright spirits with megaphones. These bright spirits made a loud noise

A story of a courageous old lady of 88 who declared she "was not a bit afraid" when she routed two burglars was told at the Cambs Divisional Court. Miss Larkin of Milton said that last Saturday evening she put her gloves, handkerchief and one penny on the chest of drawers in readiness for church on the following morning. She was awakened by a noise which she at first thought was a train shunting. After a time she saw two men come in through the bedroom door carrying the lamp from her big room in their hand. Witness jumped out of bed, lit her candle and said "What do you want". They had handkerchiefs over their faces which she pulled down.

A heavy thunderstorm, which missed Cambridge, passed over the country districts accompanied by hail of enormous size. At Cottenham the deluge was most intense for about ten minutes. The hail stones measured 1 ½ (one-and -half) to 1 3/4 (one and three quarter) inches and some which were picked up were, it is said, as large as hen's eggs. Many panes of glass were broken in the greenhouses at Mr Gautrey's nurseries. Severe damage was done to the strawberry and plum crops. Other villages including Dry Drayton were deluged with torrential rain and hail of unusual size. At Caldecote and Hardwick windows were broken and the hailstones are reported to have been the size of walnuts

The report went on to state that a shortage of water was experienced at Harston and Great Wilbraham; the supply was depleted by the pumping at the Cambridge Water Company's new works and by the drought. The latter difficulty had now been overcome by the Company fixing four standpipes in the village. Most of the wells at Little Wilbraham failed during the drought. Considerable discussion arose as to the condition of the polluted brook at Histon. It was stated that the people of Histon were living in a "stink pot" themselves a nuisance. The need of public discipline is becoming more and more apparent and rowdyism must be checked.

Among the charitable institutions of Cambridge is the Cottage Home for Little Orphan Girls in Fitzwilliam Road. Its work has been carried on so quietly and unassumingly that the majority of townspeople are probably unaware of its existence. Hitherto, owing to a lack of accommodation the numbers attending has had to be restricted to about 650. Mr D.G. Marshall of Jesus Lane, however, found a way out of the difficulty with a somewhat novel scheme. A marquee 100 feet by 40 feet was erected on Market Hill facing the Guildhall and therein supper was laid. A delightfully cool effect was obtained by leaving open a part of the side of the tent nearest the fountain and having the fountain lit up with coloured electric lights in the background. Campbell put in an analyst's report to the effect that water from the Ouse taken four miles south of Littleport was polluted with sewage and was unfit for drinking purposes. Mr T. Peake: "I would like to remind you that Ely City empties its sewage into the waters which Littleport has to drink; also that last year the rivers were absolutely unfit for drinking purposes - they were stagnant and putrid". A feature of the enquiry was the stout opposition put up by the parishes of Haddenham, Wilburton, Stretham and Little Downham. A solitary supporter from Stretham explained that he did not attend a public meeting there - which was unanimous against the scheme - because had he done so he would probably have been "crucified"

Messrs W. Heffer and Sons have become well known for the excellence of anything exhibited at their Sidney Street galleries. Well above the standard of the rest of their exhibits is some of the truly wonderful work of a Scottish artist, Mr William Watt Milne, who has a studio in St Ives. The six pictures which are exhibited have been painted in the neighbourhood of Houghton. "Flood at Houghton" is the title of a pretty little piece of work depicting the picturesque village street on a grey day with the threatening sky reflected in a pool of water in the foreground. One of the best pictures is that called "The Old Inn at Houghton", a superb piece of work

A labourer of 1, Derby-road, Cambridge, was summonsed for not having control over a horse attached to a cart in Petty Cury. P.C. Keeble said that the horse was left unattended for 20 minutes. The horse was later found at the end of Guildhall-street having apparently wandered there on its own. It was apparently making its way to the police court (Laughter). Defendant said he had been driving the animal for a number of years and had not had any trouble with it. He was fined 5s.

Ely rural water supply public inquiry, Stretham & others object ... Holland Porter, representing Stretham opposed scheme as it unnecessary. The natural supply was good & ample but the present method of obtaining distribution might be improved. Mr Savidge of Stretham who was deaf & unable to hear any of the evidence caused great amusement in his vigorous condemnation of the existing water supply and declared he was willing to pay anything to secure improved conditions. Half the population in the lower end of the village used one source of supply, and it was subject to contamination from the roads. Mr Savidge, who said he was a baker, urged that whenever it rained the water supply was muddy ... "I cannot drink it nor can I get other people to eat it". We are often led to believe that manners are changing for the worse. It is refreshing there to read another point of view. Mr Ladbroke Black says: "Twenty-five years ago the manners of an undergraduate were stiff and starchy. To have uttered a good-humoured apology would have been a derogation of undergraduate dignity. Owing to the inexperience of my cox, aged nine, I collided with several boats on the "Backs" last week, and even carried away on the blade of my oar the Japanese parasol with which an undergraduate in a Canadian canoe was shading himself. In every case I was met with a cheering. 'My fault, I expect, sir!' and a laughing word of encouragement to my cox"

The annual church parade organised by the Soham Fire Brigade and Friendly Societies, in aid of Addenbrooke's Hospital, was held on Sunday, and once more upheld its reputation as being one of the leading functions of its kind in the county. Large crowds attended the proceedings, and graced by favourable weather, the event was a great success. The decorated car, proverbial to Hospital Sundays, brought up the rear of the procession and depicted a hospital ward. During the last year 11,000 patients had been treated at Addenbrooke's, 170 of which come from Soham, whose contribution during that period amounted to about 8d per head of the population

Midsummer Fair was proclaimed this morning by the Mayor (Councillor G.P. Hawkins) when crowds of people attended to witness the time-honoured ceremony. The old cry of "Biggest fair I've seen for years" suggests that the Fair is still growing. Thurston's roundabout are again present and number about six in all. They include their famous golden dragons, gondolas and motor scenic railways. Three circuses and numerous "laugh and grow fat" shows make up a good square mile of pleasure ground. There are the usual crockery and sweet stalls, rock kings, cheap jacks, fortune tellers and the like in unusual profusion. An objectionable feature this year is a diabolical engine that emits a banshee-like wail at frequent intervals. It ought to be smothered.

Mr Chivers was doing everything in his power to see that the nuisance was being dealt with. Application had been received from Grantchester for a parish dump. Mr Francis remarked that all parishes should be asked to do the same sort of thing. There was so much tinned food consumed now, and the tins could not be destroyed in any way, so parishes should find some suitable dump for them.

The great week to which we have all looked forward so eagerly and for which such extensive preparations have been made, will shortly be upon us. The Royal Show promises to be one of outstanding importance. This will be the third visit of the Show to Cambridge. No one will be surprised at the chorus of indignation called forth by the appeal of a shopkeeper for the waiving of the Thursday half-holiday during Show week. The work of unloading machinery and materials has been in progress since May 25th and considerably more than 2,000 tons will have been handled before the closing date for delivery. The great agricultural city on the Trumpington-road (the Royal Show) is in full blast today - in more senses than one. A stiff south-westerly gale had been sweeping over the show ground for the greater part of last night and it continued with unbated strength during the day. The tents and shedding for the most part withstood the gale remarkably well but a dozen of the larger structure were blown down wholly or in part and the Mayor's tent was levelled to the ground. On the petition by the parishioners of Thaxted for a faculty directing the removal of "certain Sinn Fein and 'Red' flags from his church" the Rev Canon Noel, Vicar of Thaxted, Essex, appeared before the Chancellor of the Diocese of Chelmsford on Saturday. Captain John Oliver Barbrook described the various occasions on which the flags were torn down. On one occasion a number of persons invaded the church with ladders and endeavoured to pull down the flag. There was a struggle in which the vicar took part. Eventually an invader removed the Red Flag which he put in his pocket. The vicar grabbed at his pocket but got the wrong one and pulled out a Union Jack. The invader then said to the police - "I give this man (indicating the vicar) in charge for picking my pocket". The Chancellor found that petitions had made good their claims for the removal of the flags.

Something more than a talking-to ought to be administered to the boys who have committed so much wilful damage to the remains of the Barnwell Military Hospital adjoining the Newmarket-road just beyond the Cambridge Borough boundary. For some reason the boiler house and one complete section of the wooden hutments have been left, apparently totally uncared for, and are rapidly going to wreck and ruin. The site of the hospital, overgrown with weeds and littered with debris, forms a happy hunting ground for children who are able to get through the gap where the gates used to be. An event of unique interest and of considerable local importance took place in the Vicarage meadow at Haddenham in the form of a pageant entitled "Ye Olde Towne of Hadnam". That it aroused much interest in the district may be gathered from the fact that well over 100 people were present. A suggested alternative is that the garden should close at 5.30. A further proposal is that the principal greenhouses should be closed and their contents sold. Something will have to be done. The preliminary proposals for developing the town planning area on the east side of Cambridge were presented to the Town Council. The Borough Surveyor said the showing of roads on the plan did not bind the Corporation to construct any of them. It simply meant that that was to be the line of the roads eventually, and nothing must be done to prevent roads being made there. So although 21 roads were shown, it did not bind the Corporation to make a single one unless they thought fit. I don't think there will be any doubt about the keenness of the children of Cambridge in the League of Nations after the way in which they turned out to the Rally on Wednesday evening in spite of the most unfortunate weather. At one time it looked as if it might be necessary to abandon altogether the procession of decorated vehicles but the youngsters were so disappointed that the teachers resolved to "carry on". From various incidents it was clear that the school children were determined to come, even if their teachers were unable to bring them. Children from schools not taking part begged teachers from schools elsewhere to let them join in their group.

The new scheme for Borough housing was referred to at the Cambridge council meeting. Save that the scheme is to provide for the erection of 500 houses and that the cost may be £200,000, we know very little. It was originally proposed that a meeting should be held next Thursday but it seems more than likely we shall have to wait until the end of the year before the matter comes up in Council. And then, I suppose, there will be further delays before building can be started. While we do not want to see things rushed through with undue haste I am inclined to agree with the Mayor that "acceleration of building" is hardly a correct description of the sub-committee's activities – Table Talk

In addition to the banners of the various societies there were numerous bearing inscriptions such as "For Peace and Freedom" (Women's International League), "Patriotism is not enough", "Cambridge Sisterhood says No More War". In addition there were scores of bannerettes bearing the words "No More War". Mrs Nevinson referred to the number of deaths from influenza in 1918 which was really a war plague. The Summer Meeting is proving a gratifying success, and is in every way the best that has been held since that memorable meeting of 1914 when the war caught both the students and the Syndics unaware, and there was great trouble in repatriating some of the foreigners who had come to Cambridge for the meeting. The return of the Cambridge Mammoth Show to its old time variety and importance will recall to many minds the last occasion of its so presenting itself to the public. The gloom which rested over the Bank Holiday and show in 1914 will never be forgotten by those who experienced it. The megaphone calls in all parts of the ground for postmen to repair to their duty at once told the tale that war was regarded as inevitable, and that the mobilisation notices were to go out. On the following Friday Cambridge suddenly found itself an armed camp, through the arrival on mobilisation of the Sixth Division. The success of the Summer Meeting demonstrates once again the appreciation and possibilities of Cambridge as a holiday centre and yet Cambridge appears to be as indifferent as ever to its opportunities. Every person who has this experience is an advertisement for Cambridge, but it is an advertisement which ought to be supplemented by other kinds of publicity, the sort of propaganda which every progressive town makes use of these days. Money spent in this way would be money well spent - Table Talk 22 08 12

At the meeting of Saffron Walden Town Council the Mayor referred to books of accounts of the old Spade Husbandry Committee. In the year 1829 a public meeting was held to decide what could be done with all the unemployed of the town. Then came the question of small allotments for the labouring poor. Mr Gibson offered four and a half acres which were the first allotments for the borough and situated on Little Walden-road. Several farmers offered land. Lord Braybrooke offered Park Wall Gardens. The movement prospered. The first report said there were 78 allotments, the following year there were 144 and the tilling of the land was so good that the Horticultural Society offered prizes for the best vegetables.

Cambridgeshire School Medical Officer reported that there was serious restriction in the amount of water available for all purposes in very many villages during last summer. In several both wells and ponds were entirely dried up for periods of six to eight weeks, and water had to be carted several miles, often from districts already rather short. In one village it had been impossible to use water for laundry purposes for six weeks, the meagre supply which was all that could be spared from a neighbouring village being barely sufficient for cooking.

The School Medical Officer reported that the percentage of children with uncleanly bodies was 4.1. Cambridge visitors to St Ives are doubtless familiar with the old town clock on Messrs R. Kiddle & Son's premises in Bridge-street. This clock, which was erected by public subscription about 120 years ago, will have to be removed in consequence of the discovery that the premises have become unsafe. A special meeting of the Town Council was held to consider what should be done about the clock. There was a natural desire not to lose an old landmark which helps the town to retain its old-time character, but with so many other clocks about and finances so tight as they are today, the Council felt they could not sanction the expense of repair

Of the opinion that the water supplies to the Ely rural district are "unsatisfactory and inadequate" the Ministry of Health consider that a new supply should be provided without delay. It is understood that the R.D.C. have now arranged for the provision of an additional reservoir at Littleport.

Shall the Ely Urban Council obtain powers to kill rats or not? That was the crux of a resolution proposed at the meeting on Monday. The Rev T.J. Kirkland raised the position regarding the Mill Pits and the nuisance caused by the shooting of objectionable rubbish there and the consequent presence of rats. The danger of the evil was not generally realised. For instance, a rat chart of England showed that in the worst areas cancer was more prevalent that in others; also rats damaged crops and properties and were also a great danger to health as disease carriers. The chairman said it was not enough for one local authority to take it up and the other to leave it alone, while the Isle Committee did their utmost, West Suffolk did nothing and all the Isle rats bolted into Suffolk for the time being. (Laughter).

This is the age of new things and I am able to report that harvest operations are in full swing on Parker's Piece. Such economy has been shown in the use of the mowers on our principal ground that the grass has grown to an extent beyond the power of the customary lawnmower to cut, and so a hayreaper has been employed and the resulting heavy swathes have been removed by horse and cart.

Two horses and three or four men have been engaged on the work, so if money-saving was the thing intended by keeping to mower off Parker's Piece it has not been very effective. # c.32.3

House boats can be rented at about all prices from £2.2s.0d a week to accommodate two people to the wherry which will hold a party of eight or ten and costs about £25 a week (including two men to work her and do the cooking). I was interested the other night to observe the resourcefulness of a newsboy near the New Theatre, Cambridge. Trade seemed dull and nobody seemed to want a paper. After trying for some time without success, the youngster stopped his cry of "Paper, sir" and pondered for a few moments. Then he had a brain wave. "Paper, sir, paper. All about poor Michael" he burst forth in such arresting fashion that everybody within hearing pricked up their ears. I saw at least a dozen people buy a paper of the lad before I went into the Theatre

At a meeting held in the Grantchester Schools the proposal to purchase the entrance pavilion to the Royal Show ground, for a village hall was considered. Mr J.J. Lister explained that two years ago an effort was made to provide a village hall in connection with the war memorial scheme but this had to be abandoned owing to high prices. He had been told that if any offer in the neighbourhood of £300 was received they would be offered the first refusal. The building would provide a large central room with smaller rooms on either side and a pavilion for the cricket and football players. The proposal was that the building should be erected on the meadow to the rear of the Red Lion and overlooking the cricket ground

Newmarket Rural Council considered a report on the epidemic of fever at Chippenham during which five people have died. Dr Gellatly wrote: "As to sanitary defects, the worst is the cottages in New-row where a large number of cases have occurred, the absence of ventilation rendering them practically "back to back" dwellings. The people will not keep out of each other's homes and in many cases do all they can to conceal the facts in regard to suspected cases. It is true that very many defects of sanitation exist in Chippenham, but in no case can it be said that the health of the inhabitants has been directly affected by these defects"

The Newmarket Boy Scouts returned home after a delightful fortnight's camp at Heacham, a village two miles from Hunstanton. The weather was generally fine and the Scouts bore very cheerfully such rain as came along. Everything in camp was hearty and everybody was in good spirits. There was no sickness, no accidents. A little trouble with the lads of the village was dealt with. Five village lads used their catapults to bombard the camp, and two Scout boys were hit, but not hurt. A party of Jewish young ladies coming down on a holiday fund excursion rather troubled the camp, but this was soon settled.

At a meeting of the Ouse Drainage Board the Clerk reported the receipt of an announcement from the Ministry of Agriculture sanctioning the continuance of drainage schemes for the relief of unemployment during the coming winter. Mr Tebbutt said that he was extremely sorry to hear it. They thought those schemes were temporary expedients, but now they resulted in the creation of unemployment. Mr Knapp hoped the Board would hesitate very much before going into schemes or endorsing them. They were creating a class of professional unemployed, and the more money they spent the more unemployed they would have. It was a radically wrong thing to do.

Monday morning Cambridge saw the performance of a very ancient ceremony - but a showy relic of more palmy days - the proclamation of "Ye Ancient Faire of Sturbridge". Shortly before mid-day the Mayor, accompanied by the Town Clark, the Bailiffs, the Mace-bearer and councillors proceeded to Barnwell Bridge for the first proclamation. Both side of Newmarket Road bore a sprinkling of small boys and others curious to see the ancient ceremony. Arrived at the bridge the party alighted from their cars and the Clark read the customary proclamation and new bright coins freely distributed, resulting in a wild scramble. The party next proceeded on to the Common by way of Garlic-row, turned round and repeated the proclamation at the old Oyster House. The Fair will commence on September 25th

Recent issues of "The Inquirer" have contained matter interesting to the Cambridge public. About £4,318 has been received up to date in response to an appeal for the cost of a site and buildings for the Unitarian Church. A hall is now being built and will be opened for worship in the autumn. The site has apace for the erection of a church, which will ultimately be built beside the hall. The projected building will only be a development of a subsisting entity. A Unitarian church has existed at Cambridge for the best part of 18 years # c.83

Cambridge is very different from most places. Most of the churches here, until quite recently, have been served by ministers who were Fellows of colleges and lived in their college rooms. Before the colleges came there can be little doubt that each parish has its vicarage but in course of time these houses disappeared. But St Botolph's has been more fortunate. During the last 700 years there has always been a lodging for the incumbent somewhere within the parish, either in Corpus, or in Queens' or outside college walls. For 300 years the parsonage house was opposite the church at the corner of Silver-street. A little more than 50 years since, when the old churchwarden built the present fine house, the lodging there was given up. But the parish still had its rector on the spot with a succession of rectors having the same rooms in Queens' College. In these times when there are so many undergraduates the college needs all its available space and it is no longer content to have the rector inside its walls # c.83

A special meeting of the Cambridge Education Committee was held at Brunswick School on the report of the Borough Surveyor. He said that the rooms at the north end of the building were not safe for occupation and would have to be pulled down. He could not be responsible for the safety of the children if that portion of the school were opened after the holiday. They looked over the building and found that the foundations were slipping, the bricks in many cases were loose and breaking away. The buildings had been a source of trouble and anxiety for some time but there was no need for the alarming reports that had been spread - one that a portion of the school had fallen down and some children had been injured. No injury had been done at all # c.36.5

At the meeting of Linton Rural Council the Clerk read a letter from the Ministry of Transport enclosing an agreement whereby the Ministry paid half the Surveyor's salary, the Surveyor not to be appointed or dismissed without the approval of the Ministry. Mr Brocklebank proposed non-acceptance of the offer because from long experience of Government grants he had found that they never gave a grant without they took something back. They always said that they were going to do nothing but they "put the screws on" later on. This Council was responsible for the government of this district and they ought to be masters in their own house.

Delightful weather favoured the annual gymkhana of the Cambridge and County Motor Club. The first item was tilting at the ring for motor cycles, sidecar machines and cars. The slow race for motor cycles produced a good race, Robinson had his machine best under control and, travelling at a snail's pace, eventually won with plenty to spare. The blindfold race for cars and motor-cycles was a very amusing affair and the last event, shooting for goal with a football whilst riding a motor cycle was quite an interesting item. A novel idea was the illumination of the enclosure by the headlamps of the members' cars, the glasses of the lamps being covered with coloured tissue paper

This year's harvest has been delayed by the bad weather, and in many places little has been done. It will be very late in the month before the harvest is complete. The farmers have had to contend with a drought in the early summer and continuous rains since. There is an abundance of fruit, especially of plums, but here again the complaint of poor prices comes in.

The stackyard of the Sidney Poultry Farm, occupied by Messrs Pamplin Bros at Cherryhinton was the scene of a big fire last night. Soon after 9pm a vivid red glow in the sky attracted attention everywhere in Cambridge. Those who did not at first notice the glow were surprised to see policemen running and soon quite a respectable crowd had gathered outside the fire station. The firemen were in readiness for a call but for some time no call came and the crowd had to be content with looking at the sky and making conjectures as to where the fire was. Shortly before 9.45 the call came through by 'phone and the Dennis engine went out. The road from Cambridge to the scene was a continuous stream of bicycles and pedestrians. Arrived at the farm the curious were well rewarded by the spectacle that greeted them.

Preaching at New Service Hall, Eden Street, Cambridge, Pastor Prescott gave a striking account of present conditions in Ireland, which he recently visited on holiday. He told how he had made his way to the Dublin Central Post Office passing scores of Free State soldiers at every corner. On arrival the atmosphere seemed charged with danger, "I made rapid strides for the door only to find my way barred by two men brandishing revolvers. I was a prisoner after being in Dublin only two hours. Presently the rest of the Irregulars proceeded to pour oil over every part of the building and place explosives round among the bags of mail and set the place on fire. The building was burning over our heads and the order came 'Prisoners run with hands up'. We ran up a side street away from the burning building. Bombs were bursting, shots were flying, for the Free Troops had arrived. I walked a considerable distance along a deserted street with my hands up and finally arrived at home, feeling fortunate to be alive"

Judging by the enthusiasm shown at the first meeting of the Littleport Women's Institute it is quite safe to assume that the branch is going to be a great success. 45 new members were enrolled, thus giving a satisfactory nucleus for the formation of a flourishing branch. Mrs Luddington stressed that it was non-political and undenominational and there were over 2,000 institutes throughout the country. A demonstration of basket and tray making was given by Mrs Comins and Mrs Covill. A "nonsense" competition caused great amusement, after which games and dancing were joined in by all.

Wireless amateurs who are not owner-occupiers are discovering that landlords object to the putting up of aerials. Radio enthusiasts will probably do better to wait until it becomes certain on what lines the broadcasting hobby will be developed and perfected. It is not making such rapid progress as people expected and those who wait a little will probably save money. By all accounts it will not be necessary to have aerials at all. Any ordinary electric light installations will provide all that is necessary for an efficient wireless aerial. If there is neither electric light or bells, gas pipes can be used, or failing this a wire garden fence, or it may be said nothing more than a pair of knitting needles will be essential. All this remains to be proved and just as it took a long while to perfect the gramophone so we must expect it to be with wireless developments # c.27.81

The Borough Cemetery is a delightful flower garden compared to the Mill-road Cemetery which is an amalgamation of the parish churchyards. Attending to the subject of petrol pumps, the Mayor said he could not understand why the Council should object to the putting up of such an appliance, which would fill a car up in one minute, instead of having to run it into a garage and back it out again, taking up certainly five minutes. The petrol pump today was a thing everyone looked for if he motored. He did not know of another town of any size that had not a petrol pump, so it seemed a most extraordinary thing that an enlightened borough like Cambridge still refused to allow a pump to be put up on the footway. In a street like St Andrews-street or Regent-street there did not seem any reason why a pump should not be put up # c.26.48

Sir - Many Cambridge people will be surprised at the Mayor's surprise that petrol pumps are not allowed in Cambridge streets. Memories of past Cambridge "rags" and those of the future to come, should have convinced him of the danger of such an appliance. Many an "undergrad" would simply love to tear it from the pavement and cart it in triumph to his lodgings, and went he went "down" to take it home and say, "Look, mater, what I did". No, sir, undergraduates' pranks are band enough at times, and no one desires to see a flaming chariot of burning wood deposited near a petrol pump. Yours etc – Safety First

Sir - With reference to "Safety First's" letter on the inadvisability of installing petrol pumps on the kerbsides of Cambridge streets - has he ever seen a pump, and, if so, has he ever tried to root it up? We have seen with mixed feelings the result of several tired undergraduates leaning against an apparently massive lamppost in the centre of the town, which immediately endeavoured to emulate the Tower of Pisa, but failed miserably and fell to the ground. But let a dozen or more of the strongest of these super-men lean against, or try to uproot a petrol pump and its impassivity would, I imagine, resemble that of the celebrated and disappointing Sphinx. Let their fiery chariots and "Paynim altars smoke" all around the pumps and there would be yet another proof of their immunity for risk of fire - "Sahon"

Since the extension of the franchise to women, and largely because of this, there have been started in the villages of the country social centres for women which are called Women's Institutes, for the purpose of instructing women as to their new duties as active political citizens, and for social intercourse generally. In order to stimulate the movement a meeting was called in Newmarket. The speaker said women who found themselves face to face with the responsibility of the vote sometimes realised how little they knew. One man she knew was so enthusiastic about the Institute that he actually volunteered to mind the baby while his wife went to the Institute. And when he was told that while he was minding one baby he might as well mind six he consented to do that - (applause) – so that five other women could go with his wife.

By the erection of a handsome stone memorial cross to perpetuate the memory of those belonging to the parish who fell in the Great War, Mepal has paid a worthy tribute. From this small village with a population of less than 100, twelve men gave their lives, and one woman. On no other roll in the Ely district has a woman's name appeared. Sir, - There are still some restaurants in Cambridge which charge 3d or 4d for a helping of potatoes. This would appear to be profiteering as the proprietors probably do not pay more than three halfpence a lb. for what they buy. Before the war potatoes were thrown in with the meat, and during the war 4d was charged, as they were very difficult to get and expensive to buy. Twopence is the outside that should be charged at the present time for a helping and I advise customers to refuse to pay more" - letter from C. Cochrane

Cambridge Corn Exchange was crowded last evening on the occasion of a boxing tournament. In all the events there was some capital fighting. The audience also had the privilege of witnessing an excellent exhibition of Ju Jitsu and Katsu, in which the participants were Harry Hunter of Broadstairs, England's greatest exponent of Ju Jitsu, and Mr W. Saddington, the local expert in the art. Various throws and locks were shown but the one which interested the audience was that of throwing and rendering an opponent unconscious in a few seconds, and instantly reviving him by Katsu, the Japanese method of restoration

Undergraduates' "little ways" always will possess a great attraction for our London contemporaries. Yesterday's "Westminster Gazette" contained the following: - "The Cambridge University botanic garden has received a present of ducks from Emmanuel College wherewith to restock the lake. The Emmanuel ducks have for some time had a reputation for inebriety. They inhabited an old-world garden, two sides of which are overlooked by the students' rooms, and it has been a favourite sport of some undergraduates to feed the ducks from their windows with morsels of cake or bread soaked in liquor. By their removal the ducks will now be removed from this temptation"

The Bullen's Grove site on Sturbridge Common was less overlooked but the great point in favour of Jesus Green was that it was far more accessible and it was finally agreed to approve it # c.38 : swimming

There were a number of empty beer bottles in the mother's bedroom. In the scullery there were quantities of decomposed food, and in the pantry a heap of very filthy female underclothing. The motorist has never been regarded very kindly by the general public. Those who do not envy him his means of locomotion regard him as a sort of danger and annoyance. While they resent the clouds of dust, the smell of petrol, and the speed with which the motorist flashes by, they recognise that motoring is an evil to which they may, in some prosperous future, themselves be attracted. The speaker remarked on the continual procession of cars passing through Ely on Sunday between seven and eight a.m. en route from that haven of rest - Hunstanton. They usually returned from it more tired than if they had spent the day quietly in their own home

In the small Cambridgeshire village in which I live there has often been a shortage of water in the summer, and on some occasions the only drinking supply has failed altogether for a short time. At some times of the year the pond water is not fit to drink. Last summer the position was very serious. Nearly all the ponds and streams were dry and the drinking supply failed for several weeks. Not for many years has such interest been shown in a local election as was manifested at the declaration of the poll last night. The manager had the curtain lowered and the stage cleared. The Proctor and "bulldogs" appeared on the scene, being received with the customary cheers. As in every other town and village throughout the land the Two Minutes Silence was observed in Cambridge today. In the streets traffic was stopped by the police and pedestrians stood just where they were when the first maroon went off. Market Hill was densely crowded and as the Guildhall clock started to chime men stood to attention and removed their hats, all movement ceased and the traffic stopped. The only sounds to be heard were the crying of one or two babies. Shortly before the second maroon a shuffling step was heard coming slowly along the Cury, a few turned their heads and saw an old man who, apparently oblivious, kept on his way undisturbed until a penetrating hiss: "Stand still, Beaver!" brought him back to this world and he stood with the rest of mankind # c.45.6

If the Cambridge undergraduate can find any excuse for a "rag" he invariably organises a more or less elaborate affair. Yesterday's "circus" was a rag that everybody could enjoy; it did no harm to anybody and above all as a result of its labours aided Lord Haig's fund - "Poppy Day" - to the extent of £115 or thereabouts. The circus was a screamingly funny affair and brought everyone to doorways, windows and, in some cases, roof tops. The signal for the two minutes Armistice silence was heard in Downing-street and immediately the procession pulled up. The two minutes over pandemonium started as suddenly as it had ceased # c.36.95

Mr Barker further expressed his appreciation at the manner in which all the staff had worked during the election pressure. From November 3rd to 13th 200,000 election communications passed through that office. Sir - I much regret to read the reports of two fatal accidents caused by being run down by motorists. This is no time to be anti-rear light, anti-dazzle or diddle-daddle, but to make a move and harness ourselves with the times that we live in, and not in the times of our forefathers. I do not profess to be a prophet, but as "Motor Cycling" predicts the time when lights will be on aeroplanes and "Tourist" predicts lights on pedestrians I will predict the times when aeroplanes will be in the form of motor-cars, fitted with folding wings made either to coast or fly and pedestrians will wear mechanical-propelled boots which will by law be compelled to have a light both rear and front - R.V. The annual report of the Cambridgeshire Medical Officer of Health has just been issued. Demobilisation in 1919 was followed by the high birth rate of 20.7 per thousand in 1920. There were

131 illegitimate births. The proportion of illegitimate to total births which fell during the early stages of the war subsequently rising to a maximum in 1919 has now fallen somewhat below that for 1913. Stretham years ago. With regard to his recent lecture on the history of Stretham, the Rector has received an interesting letter from Mr. Josiah Sennitt, now of Hull. Mr. Sennitt writes:—"I well remember the old church before the restoration in 1876. There was only one gallery, which was reached by a staircase from the belfry. Mr. Tom Driver was then the leader of the singing. . . I well remember the three-decker pulpit, and no doubt, as a boy, I have stood in each of them. Mr. David Parish was the clerk and also our schoolmaster (.Mr. T.G. Parish's father). . . Although he was a strict schoolmaster, we liked him, and no schoolmaster was buried with greater regret than we showed at his funeral. The old church lives in my memory for two reasons. 1 used to go with my grandmother to the morning service on Sundays, and when standing on the seat I could just see over the top to the second deck, the minister in his white surplice. Then I saw him come down the aisle and past my pew into the Vestry for his black gown, then go to the top deck, where I could see him better. Another reason is that on Wednesday evenings in Lent my mother used to take me to the services, and on the Wednesday before Good Friday the Curate. Mr. Rainbird, who was afterwards Rector of' Witcham, preached a sermon on the text St. Luke 22 and 44, "And being in an agony he prayed more earnestly." The solemnity of the subject impressed my boyish mind very much. The old church clock had only one hand, the hour hand, and us boys could see it from the. schoolroom window; we often thought the clock had stopped, it seemed so long between 11 and 12. I believe the last corpse that was buried in the old church was that of Mr Edward Grainger. My father made his coffin. The vault was in the centre of the Church. Just under the baptismal font. The front was removed and the vault opened to receive the coffin. I can just remember it. Since coming to Hull in 1872 and during the lifetime of my father and mother, I always spent my holiday at home, and on one occasion I remember when on holiday and through the kindness of the Parish Clerk, I had a look at the old marriage register and I found the marriage of my father and mother: 'David Sennitt and Martha Pratt, March 3rd 1847'. I have been really pleased to read your lecture and to write this letter recalling scenes and memories of more than half a century ago. Thanking you sincerely for your patience and research in compiling the records." 22 12 01(2)ES [cutt]

"A band of brothers - knights of the road" was the title applied to commercial travellers at the annual dinner of the Cambridge branch of the United Kingdom Commercial Travellers' Association, held at the Lion Hotel. The speaker said that in Cambridge they had some of the finest shops they could find in the provinces. He believed the great percentage of them were healthy, sound businesses and a great many of those present could say that in Cambridge there were fewer bad debts than in other towns they visited.

Saint & co., the well-known automobile engineers of the Hyde Park Corner Garage, Cambridge, are proud of the facts that as agents for the "Sirrah" motor cycle they are able to place within the reach of the Cambridge public a real motor cycle at a cost of 25 guineas. There are at present four schools in Burwell and as from January the needs of elementary education will be served by three. Burwell Parochial (Boys) School will be closed with a consequent annual saving of approximately £500. An important part of the curriculum will be practical instruction in woodwork, cookery and laundry work. At the present moment this instruction is carried out at a room in the "Five Bells" but it is desirable instruction should be available on the school premises and not in a building half a mile away

The casual spectator dropping in at the Service Buildings, Eden Street, Cambridge might well believe he had found the headquarters of toy-land. It is here that the work of packing and distributing the toys sent in connection with the Children's Toy Fund is taking place with a busy hive of workers, largely composed of Boy Scouts and Girl Guides engaged in carrying out these duties. For the guidance of the packers a blackboard announces the fact that each parcel should contain two oranges, one apple, one bag of nuts, one bag of sweets, one bon-bon, two large and one small toy. Besides this each child was to receive a book or picture paper, and chocolates were to be given to babies

"Christmas comes but once a year, but when it comes it brings good cheer". Subscribers to the Unemployed Christmas Fund, had they paid a visit to the Labour Exchange, Regent-street, Cambridge, could have had no doubt that the Christmas message they have sent out to the Cambridge unemployed will bring gladness and some measure of seasonable cheer to many homes which would otherwise be devoid of it. Each man received a 5s. voucher for himself, a similar one in respect of his wife and a half-crown voucher in respect of each child. The vouchers were available for the purchase of coal, bread, meat, milk or provisions. There were also special pink vouchers in respect of kindly offers by tradesmen to supply groceries, meat, flour etc. up to a given amount. One man was given vouchers for himself and seven children.

Windy, showery and in every way uncongenial weather fell to the lot of Cambridge on Christmas Day. No matter how hard the wind blew or how hard the rain beat down it was impossible to mar the festive season, for those who wished to stay at home did so and felt all the snugger. In the early part of the day there was a wonderful amount of traffic on the main roads leading from the town, tending to show that the stay-at-home Christmas is not so popular as it is sometimes supposed to be. Few outside attractions were attempted on Christmas Day, but in the realm of sport much interest was shown in the visit to the town of the Racing Club de Paris, who met the Town Football Club before a crowd approaching 4,000. Those wishing to see a football match further afield had the opportunity of doing so, for the G.E.R. ran an excursion train to Tottenham

If a crowd of supremely happy kiddies be a cure for the "blues" anyone suffering that way would have done well to visit the Central School, Cambridge, when a further party of the 3,000 poor and needy children were given tea, a sight of the Mayor in his red robes, four pantomime horses, and a really good entertainment. The noise - well it is really indescribable. Any policemen directing strangers to the schools need only have said "Hear that noise? Well that's it". Two of the young ladies appearing in the pantomime "Cinderella" at the New Theatre kindly volunteered their services for the tea and following them came the four little ponies which draw Cinderella's coach to the ball

For most people the practice of watching the Old Year out and the New Year in has considerable attraction. It had that attraction for some 700 people when Mr Arthur Deck revived the ancient custom of letting off one rocket for the departing year and one for the New Year. For the first time since 1913-14 when the War put a stop to the practice has the New Year been welcomed in Cambridge in this way. The proceedings were not marked with that liveliness that some of us remembered was evinced on previous occasions, but still the interest taken speaks well for the continuation of the custom. The firing of rockets was started in 1820 by Mr Deck's grandfather

A "Cat Lover" writes asking me to draw attention to the fact that the almost annual outbreak of poisoning of cats is occurring in the neighbourhood of Mill Road, Cambridge. For some years past at this period of the year many domestic pets have been lost in the district in this way, and he suggests it is time the perpetrators of these outrages was detected and punished. Of course to some people "pussy" is anathema, but so are crowing crocks, cackling hens and seed-consuming pigeons to others and we have to learn to bear and forbear. Owners of cats will do well to take warning from this notice and seep a watch on their pets

This would lead to the installation of a new well as the expense of the parish. The Clerk said he thought it was only a matter of rent

A case had come before the Royston bench when a young man had been serious injured owing to a car suddenly coming out from behind a large lorry. The staff of the "Cambridge Daily News" had a night off on Saturday when they sat down to dinner together in "The Dug-Out", Guildhall Street, Cambridge. It was the first gathering of the kind for very many years. Mr A.C. Taylor (managing director) said he had tried to carry on the good work that his father had done in the town. He had the advantage of a loyal staff and he knew that on them depended the actual work during the few years that he was trying to pick up the threads of newspapers. Mr Morley Stuart (Editor) said some of the staff who had been working together for a good many years and had passed through some rather strenuous times had felt it would be a good thing if they could meet round the dinner table. It helped to rub off the rough edges and to enable them to understand each other better.

The Cambridge Mayoral reception was a very happy affair, and the 500 guests had a thoroughly good time. I notice that in the report of the function reference was made to the younger members of the company being eager to get on with the dancing. That term, I presume was applied to all who felt young as well as those who looked it. Some of the civic fathers could give points to the juveniles in the matter of dancing. One alderman in particular looked as if he had discovered the secret of perpetual youth. It was a mixed gathering representative of all parties. Freemasons foregathered, Rotarians rotated and Labour leaders lounged lazily.

Cambridgeshire County Council passed a resolution that the pay of the Cambs Constabulary should be reduced 5s. a week. Councillor Webb said they had to face grim realities. The present condition of agriculture was far worse than ever before in the memory of man. They would have to make drastic reductions or they would not be able to collect the money they voted away. Councillor Stubbs opposing the motion said the police rendered very valuable services; their life was a very strenuous one and made heavy calls upon their nervous system. In his opinion they were not receiving extraordinary pay for the work they were called upon to do

Cambridgeshire County Council's Roads Committee recommended that when the roadmen's hours of work are reduced from 50 to 48 per week the wages be reduced from 35s. to 30s. Councillor Stubbs said that Cambs roads were among the best in the country and the work of the roadmen ought to be paid for as skilled work. The Council ought to set an example both as to wages and conditions. What standard of life were they setting up by giving a wage of 30s? It worked out at 2d. per head per meal and how in the name of heaven did they expect families to live decently on that?

The war was responsible for a good many things and amongst others was the delay in completing the King Edward VII memorial scheme in Cambridge. Soon after his death a memorial fund raised £10,000 for Addenbrooke's Hospital. £250 was retained for a statue, bust or picture. Statuary is very costly at present but we find we can obtain a bronze bust of King Edward by the late Sir Thomas Brock, the sculptor of the bust of Queen Victoria now in the vestibule of the Guildhall. The committee recommended that the offer be accepted as it would make a welcome addition to the somewhat bare vestibule of the Guildhall

The need for more land for the allotment holder was demonstrated at the first annual meeting of the Chesterton Allotment Association. Three hundred applications for land have already been received and it was reported that the Town Clerk is in communication with Clare College with respect to the purchase of a field in Milton and Scotland roads. She thought it wise for this part of the town to see about getting their allotments before they got built over.

Speaking at the annual dinner of the Cambridge Motor Boat Club held at Matthew's Café, Cambridge, the Mayor said he had often, when walking on the tow path, looked at the "motorists of the Cam" with envying eyes. He had thought what a lazy lot of chaps they were. (Laughter). But he had also thought what a jolly good time they were having. The Town Council had just become Conservators of the Cam. The Bill was an accomplished fact, and no doubt those present were looking to the Council to use a magic wand and make an ideal waterway of the river at once. (Hear, hear). If those who were motorists of the Cam could hand over to the Council about £20,000, he thought the Council could manage that. His recollection went back over 50 years when it was a highway of commerce. The quayside in Bridge Street was line up with 20 or 30 barges containing coal, stone, wool and food. A great deal of employment was found on that quayside; many hundreds used to be employed there

In the Divorce Court a Cambridge man petitioned for the dissolution of his marriage because of his wife's adultery. Three months after he returned to France from a leave in November 1918 he had a letter from his wife telling him she was expecting a child. In March 1919 he was demobilised and returned home and found his wife unwell. She told him there had been a slight mishap. On March 10th she became very ill and was taken to the hospital where she was delivered of a still-born child. The large and imposing new premises at Ely for Lloyds Bank Ltd have just been thrown open to the public. The site is a commanding one, being on the south side of the Lamb Hotel corner. The style is a modern treatment of Tudor in Aircaster stone and red brick, red tiled roof and metal casement windows, the external doors being of Austrian oak. A short flight of steps leads to the spacious banking hall with its 'period' ornamental plaster ceiling and oak block floor. The counter accommodating five cashiers is of Austrian oak as are also the remainder of the desks and the dado around the main hall. The typists' room is entered from the main banking hall and lighted from the garden in the rear. Beyond this is a passage down to the manager's house, on the ground floor of which are situated the kitchen and it's offices, the first and second floors are entirely taken up by the manager's living rooms and bedrooms. Beneath the banking hall are situated several spacious strong rooms and the heating chamber. The bank had to be built three feet higher than what was originally intended as on a trial hole being sunk a bed of rock two feet thick was found at a depth of five feet three inches beneath which was running sand. This formation was over most of the site and it was therefore impractical to build below the rock or interfere with it. The design of the building is intended to be in harmony with the city the architect was H. Munro Cantley of Ipswich. 23 02 16

Ghostly happenings of a Cambridgeshire village of Gorefield to continue to arouse interest in the London press. Eight o'clock is bedtime says one writer. At nine, Mrs Grimshaw 82, slumbered at the fireside. Her 15 year-old granddaughter was nursing her pet lamb and feeding it by means of a baby's milk bottle. The girl described how heavy furniture had fallen and crockery had flown from shelves to the floor. She put had her jewellery in a bucket and the bucket moved across the room while she was looking the other way. Two hefty nephews kept watch throughout the night as the lady had asked no stranger should remain after dark in the morning. Next morning one said "We heard a noise; it was upstairs. It appeared as if it were things were moving but not enough to be seen". In a letter Sir Arthur Conan Doyle says "I would advise you to send your daughter away for a rest and change and then you will find the phenomenal will cease altogether. They forces have no power to hurt anybody but do break material objects. They can best be described as mischievous material children in the psychic world. In spite of the fact that about 20,000 farm labourers in Norfolk formally went on strike last night when employers' notices reducing wages from 6d to 5 1/2d an hour and increasing the working week from 50 to 54 hours expired, there is still hope of a settlement by compromise. The organiser of the National Union of Agricultural Workers says that the men are anxious to avoid strife, but they cannot accept starvation wages. The basis of settlement to be submitted is that the farmers should withdraw the wage reduction if the men will agree to the increased hours. The present plight of farmers and farm labourers throughout the agricultural depression was the subject of a deputation received by Mr Bonar Law at 10 Downing Street. The annual dinner and meeting of the Haverhill Cricket Club marked the handing over of the title deeds in connection with the ownership of the cricket ground, which through the generosity of the President (Mr J Gurteen), now becomes the property of the club. Mr Gurteen recalled that for about 40 years the club had played upon its present ground, but last year, on account of the change of ownership, there was a risk of this arrangement coming to an end. He had given consideration to the master, and the outcome was that he himself bought the ground, and he now had the greatest possible pleasure in presenting it to the club. He made the gift with no conditions whatever, except that he had nominated his three sons as trustees for the club, and had arranged that if at any future time the club should be2 30 ES

The Post Office and Cambridge and Paul Instrument Company social clubs provide a happy combination which has produced both initiatives and talent. Their dance at the Cambridge Masonic Hall was a great success, and provided some precedents. Firstly, the new large room was used for dancing, and for a big assembly was really excellent. The room itself is much on the same lines as the small room, but as yet is somewhat too new looking. However, affection for the old room makes one too ready to criticise the new. The music was equally divided between the two clubs, the Post Office with Mr Benard Wick's Tehki orchestra playing for the first half and the Trocadero Orchestra keeping the ball rolling after the interval unstuck. Both orchestras were excellent: the first provided the necessary atmosphere and the second sustained it until the small hours.

At Ely Urban Council the chairman reminded them that the question of a new sewage scheme had been before the Council for a very long time; it went back for 20 or 25 years. It had always been recognised that the existing scheme was antiquated, out of date, and always gave a great deal of trouble. During periods of storm clouds, the drains were blocked up, and were unequal to carrying away the storm water, cellars were flooded, and a great deal of inconvenience was caused generally. The disposal of sewage was certainly very unsatisfactory. The sewage tank was emptied twice a year, and it was not regarded as a satisfactory way of dealing with it. By the new scheme it would be remedied, and, moreover, the river would not be polluted as it was at present.

We have received the following statement of the Eastern Counties position in relation to the national negotiations in the building trades. As from April 14th 1923 the working hours will be 47 hours per week in the summer months and the wages will be reduced by 2d per hour in London and by 1d an hour in the Eastern Counties. For labourers the reduction will be three farthings per hour. In Cambridge the new weekly wage is: craftsmen £3.0s.8 1/2d, painters £2.16s.9 1/2d, labourers £2.6s.01/2d. The Eastern Counties operatives, who have been fearing reductions of 21/2d, 3d. or even 4d, will no doubt be interested to notice that the actual reductions are so small that, by working just half an hour extra a day they can get just as much per week as they did before

An eerie story of a puritan maiden who appeared to a visitor in a house near Cambridge is recorded in the "Westminster Gazette". The incidents were recounted by Mr Ames, who besides being psychic herself, is a writer and lecturer on psychic matters. "My daughter's house near Cambridge was an ancient one and on entering it a feeling of strange discomfort overcame me. That night I dreamed that a puritan girl, beautiful and sad, sat at the foot of my bed. The story was laughed at by my family, but strangely the vicar of the place took it quite seriously and by a study of local records was able to establish that the house had been in the possession of a Puritan family 1923 03 29

The forthcoming production by the Bijou amateurs brings into prominence once again a club that has held a big position in the life of Cambridge for the last 50 years. I 1870 Mr W B Redfern founded the Bijous, who took over premises on Peas Hill, where for many years was provided the only dramatic performance in Cambridge that were given with any regularity. As time went on the club found that the old Peas Hill theatre was not big enough for them and finally removed to the old skating rink in St Andrews's street, on the site of which the present New Theatre was built. It was not until 1881 that ladies were introduced into the cast, the female parts having before that date being taken by men.

A retired Norfolk farmer gives his views upon the agricultural situation in that County. "Unless the spring crops are sown at an early date there will be no harvest for the workers, and if there is no harvest there will be no straw, with the result that next winter very reduced quantities of stock will be kept on the farms. The farmer realising this, appreciate the fact that should this result occur there will be no necessity for a root crop. This is in no wise a threat it is simply a warning to the workers as to the possible result of their action. The ordinary townsman says that 25s. per week is not enough to live on, but he does not grasp the fact that the worker receives double wages during the harvest, and extra money for piecework and overtime. In addition, he has a cottage at a nominal rent, varying from 3s to nothing a week, which includes a garden. In numerous cases the worker is supplied with milk and butter at cost price. Altogether his prerequisite are worth anything from 8s to 10s per week.

A summer like morning and a fair, if dull, afternoon made Good Friday in Cambridge a good day for lovers of the great outdoors. So good was the weather that many were to be seen on the river and Messrs Banham's motor launch trip to Clayhithe consisted of quite a comfortable load. Footballers spent a glorious time on Parker's Piece whilst one 1,700 watched the Town play the old Bancroftians on the Town ground. Young Cambridge spent a happy time on Parker's Piece indulging in the traditional skipping, and the litter of paper and orange peel told its own tale. There was plenty of evidence of a heavy road traffic. Allotment holders were, of course, not slow to take advantage of the good day given them.

Rumours were current in Peterborough that a local soldier who was reported as missing on November 13th 1916, and afterwards presumed killed on the same date, had returned home. Unfortunately the rumours were incorrect, but on Wednesday his mother received a letter addressed from "The Hospital, London", stating the son was alive and would soon be home. This was followed by another letter the next day headed "Waiting room, Peterborough", concerning the previous communication. In the first letter the writer says "Madam - I am writing to tell you that your son will soon be home with you. Don't turn any stranger from your door, as you won't know him. We have been together since 1916. He has got me to write to you and gave me this address. Enclosed in the letter was a piece of notepaper in the handwriting of the son. Immediately on the receipt of the latter she informed the elder son. He left work at once and caught the next train to London but was unable to gain any authentic information about his brother.

As a frequent visitor to the Cambridge Free Library, I have noticed with interest the very good use to which the Reference Library is put. It is especially satisfying to notice the number of school teachers and senior scholars who spend their Saturday mornings there, and this I have observed at the Mill Road branch as well as the Central Library, showing that the Cambridge library is, as it should be, a valuable auxiliary to the educational machine. The Mill Road Library was the worst sufferer in the necessary economies of wartime and is to receive preferential treatment in consequence.

For the purpose of putting before the public the point of view of the strikers in the building trade, a meeting was held on Parker's Piece where there was a very large attendance. Mr Haynes said that 44 hours a week were enough for any of them to work. They had to remember that every man who was not with them was against them. In the event of the building operatives going down in the struggle, the railway men and workers in every other industry would have to look out, for the employers everywhere were out to reduce wages to a lower level than they were before the war. Urging the need of the workers standing together, Mr Overton said they were either partners in each other's poverty, or partners in each other's prosperity. The Trades Council were asking the other trade unions to come to the support of the building trade workers.

Speaking to Cambridge Rotary Club Dr H B Roderick compared Addenbrooke's Hospital 50 years ago with today. In 1872 the average stay in hospital was 37.87 days and in 1922 to it was 27.46 days, so that with practically the same number of beds, owing to the more rapid turnover due to shortened convalescence, they were are able to deal with a considerable number more patients. In 1922 2,376 operations were performed, and 2,231 in-patients and 4523 outpatients were treated. This great increase in work naturally involves increased demands both on the medical, surgical, and nursing staffs of the hospital, as well as on its financial resources. The present operating theatre was constructed in 1897 and today it is out of date. Two theatres, on modern lines, are urgently needed in order to cope with the ever-increasing work.

The Bishop said it was a curious & pathetic and coincidence that very shortly before the service of consecration, one who was deeply interested in it, and who had worked well for it, had passed away, and that he should be the first to be laid to rest in the new burial ground of the parish before its concentration. The Bishop said the service was the last act in a long process - the formation of St Mark's into a separate parish.

With regard to sanitation, housing is still the most important item. With inadequate housing of the people preventative sanitation is fighting a losing battle.

Sir - Traction engines do no damage to roads which are probably made, not even to tarred roads if the proper amount of granite chips are laid down, and not a soft and useless mixture of tar and sand, which is picked up at once it horses and other slow traffic. If the roads are marked, it is because they are not properly finished. I fail to see that because these motors may come from distant places they do us no good. Where would Cambridge be if it were not in touch by transport with distant places? We should go short of many necessaries, in fact, everything except for two important local products, knowledge and sausages - very good things in their way, but would not alone carry us far. He saw the policemen but they paid no attention to him. It was quite impossible to get up to 35 mph in second gear, which would probably break the engine. Seven degrees of frost were registered in many parts. Agriculturists and fruitgrowers in the county were dismayed to see the ground white with frost, and anxious inspection was made of crops to see what damage had resulted. There is no doubt that havoc has being played amongst many fruit crops, plums in particular seem to have suffered. Indeed, it is feared in some places that the plum crop has been entirely ruined. "Plums as big as horse beans are black as your hat", was the way one grower expressed it

Cambridge is justly proud of its business veterans, and it may truly be said that no one is held in higher respect than Mr William Heffer. He started as a groom but resolved to make a start in business on his own, and opened as a stationers and newsagents in a shop which is still his, the Post Office in Fitzroy Street. It has been said that Mr Heffer to a large extent altered the character of Fitzroy Street, for when he introduced to Cambridge the 25% discount off books, university men and others not accustomed to frequenting that part of the town, began to stream up there, and, of course, other tradesmen - benefited in consequence.

The sub-committee unanimously resolved that a vehicular bridge he placed at the Walnut Tree Avenue site, and that a foot bridge should be placed at the Pretoria Road site, and that tenders should be obtained at once for the construction of the two bridges and the Ministry of Transport be approached with a view to a grant towards the work

Those who attend the Christ Pieces promenade concerts will learn with interest that the Cambridge Town Council approved extensive improvements, including lighting to the bandstand there, to purchase some 500 chairs "for the comfort of the concert goers", and to set up a fenced enclosure, lined with a privet hedge, to accommodate the seats. They further empowered the Committee to set up - as cheaply as possible - glass screens, which will protect the musicians from summer and other breezes, besides effecting an improvement in the acoustics of the stand. The superintendent also produced a plan for the construction of ladies and gentlemen's lavatories on Christ's Pieces

We have started on a new month, and everyone is hoping that it will be a marked improvement on the last. Cambridge, perhaps more than any other town in the country, needs a fine opening to June. A cold and rainy May Week is too horrible to contemplate, and it will be a bad business indeed for boatmen, lodging-house keepers, and tradesmen generally if the next few days do not see a change for the better

The Cambridge town council will really have to be careful, or some of us will soon be suffering from severe shock! I went in the gallery expecting another "battle of the bridges", and, lo and behold, the report was passed without a word of comment, other than the short speech in which Alderman Starr introduced it. Then to the utter astonishment of everyone, the motion was put, there was not a single dissident and the thing was done. Alderman Starr fell back in his chair almost convulsed, the council burst into laughter, and some applauded. Now we are to have the vehicular bridge at Walnut Tree Avenue and the foot bridge is to be at the original Pretoria Road site. Well, well, let us hope all our other municipal troubles end as easily.

Sir - I agree that servants make good wives; so do other girls if they have been brought up properly at home. The good places want finding. I myself had one where I was treated just as one of the family, and no girl would wish for better. What I suggest is this: as a maid has to produce a good character, so should a mistress show one before she can get a good maid. I have four daughters and I shall not let them go out to service unless I have a personal reference from the lady and can see the bed my girls sleep in, and really know how they will be treated – A. Favoured with ideal weather the annual sports meeting arranged by the Pymoor and Oxlode Committee attracted a large attendance. This event, which has the reputation of being one of the best in the district, was more than up to the standard of previous years, and some keen competition was provided for an enthusiastic crowd. This year the interest of the meeting was enhanced by the production of a Challenge cup for cycle racing, and A.F. Hawes, the well-known Manea cyclist, was successful in securing the honour of being the first holder of the trophy. The Manea Silver Band rendered selections throughout the day and the proceedings were further enlightened by entertainments by the Magpie Concert Party from Cambridge

With finer weather, the “Mays” bumping races came into their own. People came from everywhere, on foot, awheel, and by that best of all ways - by water. The Lawns, the Rectory Paddock, Ditton Meadows, and the Pitt Lawn assumed their familiar aspect. Right from the Pitt Lawn, nearly to the Railway Bridge, was one mass of riotous colour. Ladies were attired in summer dresses of varying hues - white, green, blue, blue-grey, yellow, striped and spotted - the whole forming a pretty picture against background of trees and grass. Some ladies wore costumes, some carried furs on their shoulders, while others wore white summer coats. Mere men, not to be outdone, made a brave show in flannels and gay blazer. Balloon vendors added their quota to the brightness of the picture with their parti-coloured wares

When they had finished witness caught the driver of the car, the other three ran away but came back later. One said, "You have done me. It was too heavy. The opening days of the second week of the "Mays" celebrations are usually noted for the array of college balls and concerts, and this year is well in keeping with tradition. On Monday there were three of these functions, - Caius, Clare, and First and Third Trinity in addition to four concerts and a special dinner-dance at the Rendezvous, and in each case a success can be recorded. The weather had improved to such an extent that it allowed the usual outdoor part of the events to be carried out to the full, and ample sitting out accommodation provided in various courts and grounds. The largest function was at Trinity, where the attendance numbered something like 1,400 or 1,500.

Brilliant in every way was the Masonic ball of the "Isaac Newton" University Lodge, held at the Guildhall. The large room had been suitably changed for the occasion and presented a pretty sight. The back of the orchestra was draped with gold and red hangings, in front of which were a number of Masonic banners, flowers and greenery almost hid the rest of the orchestra. At the other end the banners supporting the balcony, and the front of the balcony itself, were covered with greenery and coloured electric lights. The attendance numbered about 450 and the outstanding feature was the brilliance of the ladies dresses, which presented a wealth of animated colour. The annual Inter-Varsity military tournament was held on the University Rifle Range, Grange Road when Cambridge beat Oxford by six events to 4. Perhaps the most popular event was the tent pegging, which reached an extremely high standard. One rarely sees it done better at Olympia. The artillery drive, too, was extremely well done. Some regular artillery officers in the audience, the hardest critics of all, seemed somewhat sceptical about it when the team drove into the arena, but after the first-time round their criticism changed to praise. The events won by Cambridge were the R.F.A. Alarm race, the individual jumping, the half section jumping, tent pegging, wrestling on horseback, and the cavalry dummy thrusting but they were beaten by Oxford in the cable laying competition. Oxford's other successes were the bayonet fighting, the artillery driving, and the tug of war.

May Week this year must surely have been one of the worst on record, from the point of view of the townspeople. One hears on every hand expressions of disappointment and dolorous comparisons with the "good old days". The motor car is largely responsible for the tailing off in the number of people who stay in the town during May Week. Motor travel is so speedy and comfortable nowadays that quite a large proportion of the people who used in the old days to book rooms now run into Cambridge in the morning and return home again at night. A local tradesmen told me that he used to be busy during the week until the late hour, being engaged in waiting on customers at their rooms after closing his shop at 8 pm, but now business is completely dead after about six o'clock.

A remarkable story of how a large sum of money was snatched from the jaws of death, as typified by the corporation refuse destructor reached me the other day. It appears that a certain tradesman on Peas Hill, Cambridge, had by some strange mischance consigned a wallet containing money to the dustbin. A frenzied telephone message to the contractor revealed that one of his dustcarts had collected at the address that day. The cart was searched, but without success. Eventually the missing wallet was discovered on the very threshold of destruction and found to contain Treasury notes to the value of between £200 and £300. Even on days when the Tripos lists were read out in the Senate House by the examiners the men's lists were handed in a sealed envelope to the chairman of the examiners by an official from the Registry, and the women's lists in another sealed envelope were handed in by an official from the local examinations and lectures syndicate. In the old days, when the order of merit in the various triposes used to attract large crowds of undergraduates to the floor of Senate House to hear the lists read out from East Gallery, it was always a standing joke that as soon as the examiner read out the word "women" the undergraduates would call out "ladies".

Further particulars of the sensational motor accident on the borders of Derbyshire which resulted in the death of Mr W. R. Finbow are now available. It appears that Mr Finbow had a removal contract from Chorley, Lancashire, to Cambridge for which he enlisted the help of Mr Holliman's van. Mr Finbow's own van was loaded up and left for Cambridge first. This reached its destination in safety, albeit with the brakes burnt out. Mr Finbow chose to come back in the other van. Approaching a bridge on a steep and winding road the heavily laden furniture van began to descend the hill. The brakes were applied, but refused to act and the van started to career down the hill at 50 miles an hour and making so much noise that the inhabitants of the village at the foot of the hill were out in the road to see what was happening. Mr Finbow was standing on the footboard shouting suggestions and about 20 yards from the bridge fell he from the vehicle and the wheels passed over his body.

Sir- I was interested to read your article about donkeys at Midsummer Fair. The rides are no doubt appreciated by the kiddies, but it is surely going too far when "kiddies" of 18 and 25 are seen mounting on the backs of our four-footed friends. The ponies are started off on a run of 100 yards, and tear backwards and forwards, sweating and blowing, without a minute's rest, beaten with sticks and sundry kicks, yells and curses. The police should look into the matter for there is nothing more painful to watch than the ill-treatment of a dumb animal and if a young man of 18 cares to make an ass of himself to ride on something intended for a child, it will be easy to discover the bigger donkey of the two. - A Lover of Animals

Ely Rural District Surveyor reported on the manure heaps in Long Drove, Haddenham. Mr Heffer said it would certainly injure the smallholders and farmers if they were stopped putting their heaps of manure in the droves. Mr Porter said it was causing an obstruction. He did not wish to debar them from getting the manure out but if they were going to allow anyone and everyone to put manure on public highways the council were creating a very dangerous precedent. Mr Kisby said that it would cause hardship for it was possible that many of those men had a big accumulation of manure which could not easily be moved.

Midsummer fair seems to get bigger than ever. From all appearances the amusement caterers and smallholders are going to do good business. Hoop-las are not so plentiful, but there are many new ingenious contrivances to extract the pence from those who are out for an evening's merriment. The sideshows are certainly more numerous, but one still misses the large pavilions in which the

The Master of Downing College told the Cambridge University Local Lectures Jubilee conference that he his short experience as an extension lecturer made one realise that one's knowledge was not as extensive as one thought. When a lecturer was appointed in the university before intra-mural work one of the last questions which any one thought of asking was "Can he lecture?" (Laughter). If every university lecturer was required to give a trial lecture before a select body of experienced extension lecturers the university would reap no little advantage. The extension lecturer was trained by his audience to be a lecturer and educated by his audience to a better understanding of his subject.

Unusual interest was taken in the A.A.A. open championships. From a local point of view our interest was mainly in the Varsity men who again perform most creditably. One must sympathise with Dr R Salisbury Woods, the greatest weight putter Cambridge has ever had. For years he has performed annually at the championships and last year was unplaced at 40 feet one inch. He could not compete this year owing to an operation and the event was won at 39 feet 2 1/4 inches. Some people seem to be disappointed that Harold Abrahams did not again carry off three events but I do not think that he was quite at the top of his form. His jumping was magnificent he has improved in this event so much that I am hoping he will be able to hold his own against the world next year.

Cambridge was visited last night with one of the sharpest thunderstorms that has passed over the town for several years past. The roll and rumble of the thunder at times was almost continuous. Sometimes it almost resembled that of a bombardment, at others a rattling volley of musketry. Once or twice there was a blinding flash, followed almost instantaneously by a short, sharp, stunning clap of thunder. There were periods of intense electrical activity, a sort of "mad minute", during which rapid flashes and crashes came and went in a wild hurly-burly of light and sound.

One had been in since 1902, another since 1905 and another since 1914. Mr Cole said they should bear in mind that Newmarket was only a small town, although some people called it a gold mine, and if they compared it with some of the other towns they would see that Newmarket subscriptions were very creditable. Ely they looked upon as a sort of heaven but the good people of Ely only gave £70, while the bad town of Newmarket gave twice as much.

Sir - Carpet beating should not be permitted, even on a Common, close enough to the surrounding houses or the public roads to be a nuisance to householders or the passing public. Neither should householders themselves be allowed to beat carpets in their back yards, unless they have a large space behind their houses, so that the dust will not be swept by the wind into their neighbours' houses. It often happens that as soon as one person has cleaned up their house, the next door neighbour bring their carpets out and beat them, and the dust they get rid of is blown back into their neighbour's clean house. It is a very dirty and dangerous practice to beat carpets close to any house, and very annoying to say the least of it. These nuisance appear to be on the increase and should be stopped - "Health"

There are new pleasures in store for workhouse inmates. Amazed and almost disbelieving that the music and songs were being heard from "Lonnon" the inmates of the Ely Union were given a wireless concert by Mr Charles Howes. Two receiving sets were used, one to operate the loudspeaker, and the other to make the music audible in the headphones. Two aerials were erected, one outside and the other slung across the dining room where the concert was given. During the evening the London broadcasting station mentioned Ely, and said they hoped the concert would be received well at the Tower House, and that it would be enjoyed by those who were listening in for the first time. The offer of the London and North Eastern Railway Company in connection with the acquisition of the site of the old Newmarket railway line for the purpose of linking up Cherryhinton road with Mill road, Cambridge, led to a good deal of discussion at the town council. For many years they had tried to get the company to come to terms, so that they could join the Rock Estate with Romsey town. The line was the key of the situation, and there were great possibilities of development on that side of the town. Mill Road too was strangled at present. Sir - for generations Hobson's Conduit has been well cared for. For 30 years or more an industrious and expert custodian gave the conduit daily, almost hourly, attention, keeping it clean and trimming the banks. In an unhappy moment the stream fell into the hands of the Corporation and has been allowed to fall in to neglect, its banks are untrimmed and dishevelled, and the stream is choked with dirt and weeds. Every now and then - at long intervals - three or four men attack the weeds, drag loads of them on the banks and leave them to fester in the sun. The raid is useless; in a week or two the state is worse than before. Many people wonder why the New Theatre lies fallow for so long during the summer, but theatres get dirty during their year of work, and are badly in need of a spring clean at least once a year. This year it has had something rather more in the nature of a complete transformation. As one enters the vestibule one is immediately struck by the sense of newness. It makes the approaches to the auditorium the cleanest and prettiest that I have seen in a provincial theatre. The stage itself has new boarding and several new sets

In Norfolk a large number of cottages have for centuries been built of clay lump - that is, sun-dried bricks. They are warm in winter and cool in summer, and they are perfectly dry and everlasting. Recently a bungalow of clay lump was built in Cambridgeshire for £720. The clay lump bricks are made by first laying on the ground three or four inches of Barley straw, then covering these with three or four inches of clay, dug close by, and pouring plenty of water over all. Then the whole is trodden into a paste by a horse which walks backwards and forwards, and round and round till all is well mixed. Wooden moulds are then filled with the mixture and smoothed over.

A driver for the Taxi Side-car company was summoned for driving a motor cycle taxi cab in a dangerous manner in Castle Street, Cambridge. Walter Langford, labourer, spoke to seeing a taxi side-car coming down Castle Hill. At the crossing it dodged in front of a motor car, and the side-car caught the front of the motor car which struck the side of Messrs Clark's shop in Northampton Street. The motor car hit a man and knocked him down.

Sir - I would like to make a suggesting regarding the new traffic arrangements at the junction of the Newmarket Road, Jesus Lane, and the three other tributary traffic arteries at that point. It seems to me such a pity to rob our dear old town of Cambridge of a cherished sign manual viz. "The Four Lamps," a titular description of a point in the town becoming ever more known and used, which is spoken of by old Cantabrigians wherever they meet the world over. I always regretted the removal of the old four-armed lamp, ugly as it was. – Ex-councillor

Sir - 10 years ago the game of bowls was a hardly known in Cambridge but the late Mr Basil Whibley worked very hard to bring before the Council a scheme for permission to lay out greens on Christs Pieces and Alexandra Gardens, and to build pavilions. There now appears to be a lack of real sporting spirit. At present novices are simply not wanted, and are very pointedly made to feel it by old stagers, but they will not last for ever and new blood will be missing. - "An ex-President of bowls clubs"

The 1st Battalion Cambridgeshire Regiment who returned from their fortnight's training at Felixstowe have had a busy but very enjoyable time. The camping grounds was close to the beach and the bathing facilities were much appreciated. The weather was rather rough and rainy, especially Tuesday, when the tents were frequently blown down, until the men got up to the dodge of anchoring them with lumps of rubble. They watched a demonstration to illustrate some of the lessons learnt in the late war, including infantry attack under cover of machine guns.

Cambridge county court heard an action for damage to a private road at Caxton Common farm. 5-600 sacks of Barley were moved by a traction engine and truck, the engine weighing eight or ten tons and the truck some three tons. The result was that the road was cut up so that it was impossible to use it for traffic of any description. The ruts made by the engine were so deep that the wheels of the trucks did not revolve and it slithered along on the axles. The road was not now usable even for horse traffic.

Certain diseases had been lowered doing the last 50 years in response to sanitary improvements, he said, but no direct evidence could be found as to any decrease of the death rate as a result of vivisection.

This affords some idea of the number of people in Cambridge who want houses and don't mind paying a fairly good rent for one.

On Saturday he was driving some pigs. Suddenly there was a vivid flash of lightning and he was stuck to the ground in a dazed condition. With the exception of still having a headache he is now little worse for his experience.

Mr Ransom said that Soham could now boast of a pure water supply, which, in view of the fact that less alcohol was consumed than in bygone years, was very necessary. Many would be grateful for the water and he hoped there would be further applications from the inhabitants, so that all would pay their share of the rates. The site of the water works joins the main road to Fordham. Here has been erected a magnificent water tower, substantially built in red brickwork, which constitutes a landmark for many miles around.

Stretham's veteran carrier. Has Driven Carrier's Cart for 64 Years on Ely Road.
Mr. Edward Lowe, of Ivy Cottage, Stretham, near Ely, is shortly to celebrate his 65th year as a carrier. He is 78 years of age, and, despite the fact that he has regularly driven his carrier's cart from Stretham to Ely and other places for that period in all weathers, is still healthy and hearty. Four and sixty years ago Mr. Lowe harnessed his first horse to his first conveyance—a tumble cart. For 19 years his horse, named "Lighthouse" served him truly and well. Another horse, named " Short," took her plane on her demise, and lived for 16 years, while "Polly" her successor was driven by Mr. Lowe until she was 15. With the passing of the tumble Mr. Lowe purchased a spring cart, and it is remarkable that in his 64 years as carrier he has only had three conveyances. His present one, with the exception of the wheels, is nearly 50 years old, but apparently is as strong as the day it was made. Mr. Lowe as a boy can remember the stage coaches which used to stop at the Red Lion Hotel. He has had many interesting experiences during his carrying career, and some amusing ones as well. In the days when cricketers wore top hats, Mr. Lowe's Saturday afternoon occupation was to drive the Stretham scorer and a bell tent to the various cricket grounds in the district. Whether he conveyed the top hats also is not recorded. On one occasion he was driving a party of 13 people from Ely Market to Stretham when the back band of the harness broke. The whole of the occupants of the cart were pitched out on the roadway, but, with the exception of a few minor scratches, no one was hurl. One old man however would insist that he was dead. "I'm dead. I'm dead", he groaned and nothing would alter his opinion. "Are you certain you're dead" asked his wife. "Yes certain" was the reply. "Then lie quiet," was the wife's comforting response. Mr. Lowe's father was born in 1854, the year in which the Battle of Trafalgar was fought, and ten years before the Battle of Waterloo. There was a practical joker who used to ride in Mr Lowe's cart in the early days of his carrying business. He was always in the habit of shouting to any passing vehicle "Hi! Your horse had not got all his shoes on in front", Down would come the driver ton inspect the animal and reply. "He has." "No, no he isn't." would retort the practical joker, "two of them are on his hind hoofs!" Mr. Lowe has come to Ely markets through cuttings of snowdrifts several feet high, has driven through thunderstorms and torrential rains, but the weather has never troubled him, and his health has been excellent. He has never seen the sea, but says he "knows London well" CDN 23.8.1923 [cut] 23 08 24a (photo 23 02 31)

A huge boiler, mounted on a trolley, and towed by two heavy traction engines, sank into the roadway at the corner of Thompson's Lane, Cambridge, at about a quarter to twelve this morning. It appears that the boiler was being conveyed to the Electric Light Company's works in Richmond Terrace, when the road collapsed under the strain. The boiler is about 30 tons in weight, and was many feet in length, and it is estimated that together the boiler and trolley weigh 40 tons. After several hours work the boiler was extricated.

Ely Council received a letter from L.N.E.R. Company asking if they were prepared to consider the question of developing Ely as a tourist centre. They had outlined the cost of an advertising scheme as follows: pictorial poster, (300) to cover two years, £90; guide book, mostly paid by local advertising, £50; newspaper advertisements according to means available. A sum of £250 would give very good publicity to Ely. Mr Burrows said that anything that would tend to popularise Ely and attract people to the town should be done if practicable. There were several people who would be willing to pay through the rates for the popularisation of Ely.

"What would a socialist government do with the universities?" was the subject of an address by Professor Lindsay at a summer school at Scarborough. His reply to the question was, "Give them a great deal more money, use them a great deal more, and leave them alone." He conceded that if universities were not so exclusively devoted to training middle class people for the professions, and if they undertook some political and social teaching and research, bringing them into contact with the life of the working classes, the objectionable aspects of its conservatism would disappear. He would propose to extend the summer school habit which had greatly grown in the past few years. Universities should not turn people out and neglect them afterwards. The student who had gone out into life for a few years usually knew what he wanted to learn, and applied himself more diligently, but, on the other hand, his mind was less receptive

The mayor said it was the only spot where they could get a flow of water, which came from above the sluice, and in this way they were able to always keep the water clean. It was surrounded by seven schools and they believed it would be for the benefit of the young lives of the town that they should be able to come there instead of bathing in the river, which was most dangerous because of the mud and weeds. Speaking through a megaphone he said that both he and his wife liked water, but they liked it warm. (A voice: "With a drop of something in it!" and laughter)

This morning there was not a caravan in sight, but kiddies with a few pennies need not give up; something is sure to turn up, even if it's only a rock stall. Spectators were but small in number, consisting mainly of youths and babies. According to the proclamation no unlawful disturbances should be made, and "all idle and disorderly persons" should depart forthwith. Apparently none of the spectators were offenders in these respects for no one made a move until they had scrambled for the coppers thrown to them by the mayor, neither did the rain-soaked constable on duty have to assist any ill-disposed individual in search for pastures new

This week is the last of a successful variety season at the New Theatre, Cambridge, and the programme forms a very attractive wind-up. Joe Cohan and Anna Dorothy play the old old comedy of the quarrelling husband and wife, their turn being known as "Two Wise Fools". Following a recent letter from the Vicar of Fordham in praise of the free library scheme which is being run in the villages by the Cambridgeshire County Council. Boxes of books of all classes are sent to the various villages, where demand for them has been found two exist, and are returned at the end of three months in exchange for a fresh supply. The first boxes went to 65 villages and boxes were also sent to 43 elementary schools for the special use of children. There are now 88 library centres in the county, and only 28 villages have not yet taken advantage of the benefit of the service. The scheme aims to develop the reading habit amongst those who have, as yet, been content to read nothing but the Sunday newspaper and a penny novelettes. Sir - During the time that Silver Street, Cambridge, has been closed for traffic, some hundreds of persons have used Mill Lane, Sheep's Green to Newnham mill path. This opens a solution of the problems of relieving Silver Street of a great number of bicycles, especially during the dinner hour. I would like the Corporation to consider widening the wooden bridges, lessening the gradients, covering in the outlets of Newnham mill, and improving the cobble stones in Mill Lane, in order to encourage cycle riders to use this way. Due to some boys playing with fireworks a stack on Mr Griggs' farm burst into flames and it was not many minutes before the entire stackyard was on fire and it was soon obvious that the only building that could be saved was the farm house itself. By the time the fire engines arrived the sky was lit up for miles around and pieces of burning material were flying over the village. Thatched roofs were continually catching fire and householders were kept busy all night putting out burning parts of their property. The fire soon spread to the Priory Farm. It was not long before the three ponds which had supplied the tenders with water were dry, and the nearest source of supply was the river. A beautiful new chapel presented by the family in memory of the late Alderman William Potter Spalding, one-time mayor of Cambridge, was dedicated by the Bishop of Ely at All Saints church, Cambridge. The chapel has been formed at the East end of the South aisle. It comes in wonderfully well here, and supplies a long felt want to the church. The work has been carried out by Mr William Saint of Cambridge and the Artificers' Guild of Cambridge, to the design of Messrs Bodley and Hare, architects

Under the Government's immigration scheme, the Cambridge Juvenile Unemployment Bureau has sent out to Australia five boys. The first of these has return home an interesting letter in which he says: "It is a pleasure to me to write and tell you my experiences in Aussie, and if you are the means of inducing any other young fellow to come to the land of sunshine, it would please me more. J. and I have stuck together. We were in the same cabin in the boat, which held eight bunks. Ours was a slow boat. It took us over two months to reach Australia. I have been at Moss Vail over 10 months and am never short of a few pounds. I think it is a pity that more boys do not come from Cambridge. You have such a number of unemployed. Of course one has to work fairly hard but work has done me a power of good. I would not hesitate one minute to recommend any young fellow to come to Australia"

The Cambridge Dairyman's Association report says they had many cases of "pirate" traders and "cut" prices. The position today is that the farmers demand a high price for their milk and the public equally unanimous in their demand for cheap milk. It was to the public advantage that they would be buying milk 1d a quart cheaper than last year. Mr Arnold said: "We only want one milk - the best; and we want to cater for the poor as well as for the rich". The best milk was at a prohibitive price for the poor. It was up to them to deliver a pure milk obtainable by the poor at a nominal sum.

Representatives of the various drainage districts through which runs the Old West River assembled at County Hall, Cambridge, to consider a scheme for cleansing the river and repairing the banks. The work was one of the unemployment schemes proposed by the Ouse Drainage Board. Mr A.E. Wright said the river had been in a deplorable condition since 1917. Captain Matthews said that in April 1922 the river was surveyed and was very much stilted up, and the banks were 18 inches below the maximum flood level, so that it was a very serious matter.

On Thursday the Central Cinema once again opens its doors, and another step towards a brighter Cambridge will be achieved. The main scheme of alteration has been the heightening of the roof, the removal of the pillars and improvement of the ventilation schemes. The absence of the pillars, which at times were a source of discomfort to some of the audience, will alone reconcile patrons to their long period of exclusion. The decorative scheme is entirely new and is based in shades of coffee and dark walnut, relieved with Wedgwood blue, an effective combination which is continued in the huge lampshades, which were always such a feature of the decoration. Another big feature is a new screen and projection which has been carried out by the Gaumont company. The projection is now situated about half way down the hall, and not at the back as previously # c.76.9

Witness had received complaints and stopped defendant who said he knew what he could shout and witness could report him if he liked. Cross-examined: He was not aware that a petition had been signed by 66 people stating they were not annoyed. Mr Pryor submitted there was no case to answer. There must be proof of annoyance to somebody. The case was dismissed.

Sir, - May I draw your attention to three great points of danger in Great Shelford? One is by the war memorial, the other at Pumfreys corner and Little Shelford. To a newcomer the speed of some of the cars is most alarming. On Monday my daughter's Alsatian puppy was knocked down by a car going at great speed. I hear there were some women in the car, but can only suppose they were the thoughtless present-day variety without thought or feeling for anyone, or they would have asked the driver to stop. During the short time we have been here another dog has been killed and two men knocked down opposite the war memorial - E.S. Adutt

The long-waited for reopening of the Central Cinema, Hobson Street, Cambridge, took place in the presence of a good attendance. This popular house of amusement had so established itself with the lovers of the silent drama that its temporary withdrawal from the ranks of amusement caterers has caused no little concern. Not a few patrons felt that if a particular film did not altogether appeal to them, there was always a good orchestra to listen to, and this is doubtless one of the secrets of the Central's success. Under the renewed direction of Miss Norma Thomson the orchestra is better than ever, and some distinctly appropriate music was played with skill and efficiency.

Major Stanley raised the question of motor cyclists. A good many ladies and gentlemen didn't realise they ought to have a proper silencer. He did not think that 10 per cent of the people had one. There was one “fiend" who went through Trumpington about 11 o’clock at night and made enough noise to rouse the dead. Dr Ellis agreed and said that in his village the speed was something terrific. Cambridge music lovers can never complain that their wants are not catered for. A new departure will be the introduction for the first time of the Negro spiritual and plantation songs which have long held such a prominent place in the musical life of London. The remarkable thing is that their introduction to Cambridge has been so long delayed. Dressed in the costumes of the period, Miss Edna Thomas, gives her audiences, surfeited did with Negro syncopations, real plantation songs born in the days of slavery.

The news that Papyrus had been beaten by six lengths at Belmont Park, near New York, was received in Newmarket with disappointment. Of course there are excuses to be made for the horse. The voyage was against him in the first place. But perhaps his greatest handicap was that he ran in English plates, admirable for racing on turf, but not for the unfamiliar dirt track. The American horses had a special kind of shoe, which by long experience they have found best for a heavy muddy track. But there was a very strong hope that the Newmarket horse would overcome all his difficulties

Sir, - In some provincial towns the local authorities have adopted a scheme whereby tenants are given the option of purchasing the houses they occupy, upon slightly increased rent-purchase terms. Cambridge town council will soon have some hundreds of houses under their control, and it would surely be of advantage if some such arrangements were come to. Some hundreds of houses will eventually be erected on the Chesterton Hall site. Even now one cannot view the place without being struck with the depressing uniformity of all the houses - all one design, all one size, all one colour - not forgetting the flap over the front door. Considering that the council employ architects one would have expected something more varied to relieve the horrid monotony – "Chestertonian"

The detestable proposal to improve St Mary's Street by lopping off nine feet of church yard; the very pleasant little old world Emmanuel St to be made banal by altering its lines and proportions; Coe fen to be utterly ruined for ever by cutting a new road for motors. And who in their right mind would dream of building public baths in so outlying and unattractive a suburb as Gwydir Street. - Delta

(Laughter). The chairman said 104 fatal cases of cancer had been reported. Cambridge public health committee recommended the council make an order declaring the fried fish trade to be an offensive business. But Councillor Few said the council had power to insist there should be proper appliances for taking away the smell. Was it a question of the district where the shops were? Was it a case of no objections in New Street, but when it came to Chesterton it was offensive. He believed that in the case of the fried fish shop in Victoria Road it was the property owners that were backing opposition because they were afraid their property would suffer. Fried fish shops are the restaurants of the poor. If these shops were closed many people would be prevented from getting a hot meal

Sir, many Cambridge people can remember the "Dismal Jimmies" protesting at the suggested new road from the Four Lamps over Midsummer common and the bridge to Chesterton. And not only is it a boon and a blessing to Chesterton men; it is a credit to Cambridge. Voting is taking place in six wards today for the election of Cambridge town councillors. Two things which have gradually become usual at these yearly events again stood out prominently. One was a general slowness of the voting and the other the foggy weather, accompanied by rain. Cambridge would be disappointed indeed if the Fifth of November failed to produce a rag of some sort. Last night's effort was, to say the least of it, feeble and was sustained for the most part by such residents of the town as come out for excitement on such occasions, and a handful of very callow freshmen. Fireworks there were in plenty, but the old spirit was lacking. Had it not been for the mounted police and the proctors, the market square would have been its usual desolate self soon after 9.30 pm. It was noticeable that as soon as the mounted police left the crowd decreased by 50 per cent.

A devastating fire which raged in the centre of Whittlesey throughout Sunday morning wrought extensive havoc to house and shop property causing damage running into several thousands of pounds. Two houses and shops and a private house were completely destroyed and the fire which involved property on both sides of Market Street was the most serious that has occurred in the district for a long time past. At the same time the town was extremely fortunate in escaping a far more disastrous conflagration considering the situation in which the fire occurred, the rapidity with which it enveloped the properties involved, the high - almost hurricane - wind which blew and the inadequacy of the local equipment for fighting so serious an outbreak. Indeed the most remarkable thing about the fire was that it was kept from spreading to the surrounding property and assuming dimensions which would have constituted a real catastrophe. The outbreak occurred on the south side of Market Street at the junction with Broad Street. Two adjoining properties were involved: the house and grocer's shop owned and occupied by Joseph Perkins and the confectionary and tea room owned by Mr J.R. Fox. Mr Perkin's was of the old-fashioned type with the bedrooms in the thatched roof. Mr Fox's property had also a thatched roof covered with tiles. Smoke was seen issuing from the corner of the thatched roof of Mr Perkin's premises at 8:30 on Sunday morning and efforts were promptly made to subdue the outbreak. At first the smoke was the only sign that anything was amiss, suddenly however the thatch burst into flames and in a brief space the whole roof was ablaze, the high southerly wind assisting the spread of the fire and hastening on it on its course. Very soon it was evident that little could be entertained of saving the two properties. A crowd of townspeople was quickly attracted to the spot and there was no lack of willing helpers but nothing could be done except in clearing neighbouring properties to which there was a danger of the fire spreading. Whittlesey Fire Brigade early on the scene with their manual engine but with equipment of such a limited capacity and with no considerable supply of water in the vicinity the brigade were powerless to cope with the conflagration. As there is no water main at Whittlesey the only source of supply was wells and such as these as could be utilised were soon pumped dry. 23 11 09&a ES

The red poppy of Remembrance was everywhere in Cambridge today. Every buttonhole, every bicycle, and every motor car bore visible tribute to those who died that England might live. Everywhere were busy undergraduates smiling and pushing their business and selling red silk poppies in aid of the Earl Haig's Fund for ex-servicemen and their dependants. The average undergraduate loves to be "up and doing" and any way he can use his superfluous energy for a good cause appeals to him. The Sun had dispelled a heavy fog when the Cambridgeshire regiment, headed by their regimental band arrived on Cambridge Market Hill and formed three sides of a hollow square. There was almost complete silence, broken only by some restive motor in an adjoining street. Then the beautiful chimes of Great St Mary's struck the hour. A few seconds later came the report of the maroon and automatically the parade sprang to attention. Our thoughts were with a glorious dead, and of all they had suffered in those years of agony. And then … boom! A role on the drums broke in on the silence, and the buglers sounded the "Last Post"

A merry and light-hearted party of undergraduates, despite police vigilance, succeeded in obtaining their hearts desire - they manage to light a fire on Market Hill. Certain of the undergraduate community attracted the attention of some constables to a gas lamp on the one corner of the square. They demonstrated a desire to figure on the charge sheet of the police court by the charmingly simple process of putting out the light. The police "fell for it" and kept watch on that particular part of the market place. Meanwhile another body of the faithful rushed on to the Market Hill with a rowing eight filled with petrol and had it alight before people realised what was towards.

The "rag" consisted in the purchase of one of the old four-wheeled tram cars that used in bygone days to be both a convenience and an adornment to the streets of Cambridge. Signs were not wanting this morning of a "big push" being made in the county by the supporters of the rival parliamentary candidates. A representative of the C.D.N. who motored round some of the principle villages, noticed a big concentration of motor cars bearing the Conservative colours, which

Elections, like boots, beer and, of course, bananas, are generally held to be much below pre-war standard. Some of the old spirit seems to have been awakened in the campaign which closed last night, and a "certain liveliness" on Cambridge Market Hill was slightly reminiscent of the old eve of the poll scenes. Many discussions were hastily adjourned as dense clouds of acrid smoke from a smoke bomb rolled down on them, and there was a gentle scramble for some minutes. While this was going on an agile disciple of Tarzan shinned up a lamppost and revived the ancient pastime of "dousing the glim". A slick-handed undergraduate switched on a constable's lamp attached to the latter's belt at the rear, and the limb of the law strode around blissfully unconscious of the shining light behind.

The question of providing additional accommodation at Cambridge workhouse was considered. The committee had inspected the sanatorium of the Leys school in Hooper Street which was for sale. It appeared to be suitable for a nurses' home. Mr Hall said they ought to leave some of the patients at Chesterton. Some of them had been in the institution for 10 or 12 years and it would be better to leave them there to spend the evening of their life, where they knew almost everyone

Yesterday's rugby match between Oxford and Cambridge was celebrated by undergraduates of both universities in right royal, and it is feared, somewhat rowdy, style in the West End of London. The two teams and their friends overran the Winter Garden Theatre. They walked over the stalls, climbed in and out of the boxes, invaded the orchestra and the stage, crowded the vestibule and overflowed at times into Drury Lane. The performance was interrupted continuously by noisy hilarity. All the songs and choruses were "guyed" and mimicked and the performers were pelted with miles of paper streamers. The performance had to be terminated and the theatre had to be closed

A Fordham newsagent and fruiterer appeared for his examination in bankruptcy. He said that up to 1914 he worked for his mother hawking fish, fruit and vegetables, then she gave up the business and handed it over to him. It was £28 in debt at the time and there were a pony and cart and a barrow worth about £7.10s. About six months later the pony had to be destroyed. He added the news agency business in 1915 employing three boys. His average takings per week were about £67 for the fish and news agency and fruit and vegetables £30.

A Cambridge cycle agent and gramophone dealer who started in business without any previous experience appeared before the bankruptcy court. He had commenced business at Abbey Walk although never apprenticed to the cycle trade as he had always had an inclination that way. He also took up the gramophone and record business in which he had no experience, but he thought there was money in it. He estimated his turnover at about £10 a week. He lost about £40 on Christmas toys by over-stocking and £67 on the fall in bicycle prices

Cambridge town council formally received the resignation of the borough surveyor, Mr Julian Julian. He said in a letter that work on roads, bridges, planning etc had been delayed and he had found that people had attributed these delays to the weakness of him and his staff. Councillor Stubbs said they had lost a brilliant surveyor. His department had been understaffed and he had been struggling alone and it appeared that he would not have resigned had he been given help

A recommendation that a subsidy equivalent to £8 per house for 20 years be given to induce private enterprise to proceed with the erection of houses was carried by Cambridge town council. Councillor Few thought those who built would take advantage of the law of supply and demand. Only last week a case occurred of a landlord of a house in Romsey town raising the rent from 7s.9d. to 14s.9d. when the father died, declaring that the house had become vacant and telling the daughter she could have it at the increased rent – nearly 100% advance

At Cambridge town council councillor Edwards asked to know what policy was adopted to find out if goods were consistent with the prices charged. He knew for a fact that on one occasion several dozen hurricane lamps were supplied of three different qualities and yet the invoice sent to the council had the highest rate for the lot. Then there was the case of shovels. The firm which had the order went round to other firms asking for them, saying: “they’re only for the corporation. Anything will do”. A high price was asked for the whole of these shovels which were of two qualities

We are likely to hear a great deal more about proportional representation in the near future than we have in the past, but I am afraid the country will be chary of adopting it in view of the hopeless confusion that seems to exist in those places where the system is already in force. Five years ago, after the first instance of P.R. in Cambridge University I remarked that the general feeling was one of bewilderment. Now in 1923 we have much the same mistake. A system which has caused as much confusion in one of the leading universities after five years' experience would want a mighty lot of explaining to rural divisions

Ely council considered a scheme for electric lighting. The cost of the plant would be £10,500 and would consist of two 100-kilowatt diesel engines, driven direct current generators, controlling switchboard and distribution panels. The cost of wiring Ely would be £500 as they had 10 miles to cover. A battery of accumulators would mean that at night when the engine stopped there would be current if you switched on

William Hunt told the court he had a milkround and a general stores at Haslingfield. In September he was hard pressed for a pony and paid £10 to have one on trial and then pay so much a month. On the way to Cambridge he, his wife and children were nearly thrown out on two or three occasions on account of the pony stumbling. He concluded the pony was not fit. A vet said the horse had several old scars and he would describe it as broken-kneed. It was not well nourished and was liable to go down at any moment.

Cynics have said that toys are but the parental antidote to the infantile depression resulting from over-eating. Be this as it may, toys are an indispensable part of Christmas, and the parents who take their children to Laurie and McConnal will experience considerable difficulty in getting them out again. There are toys large and small, cheap and expensive, the sort of toys to keep, and the sort to give to the destructive child. They are also making a special feature of wireless sets this year, and have a large variety on show

During the past 28 years a police-court missionary has been engaged in the Cambridge courts. It has for its main object the reformation of all, irrespective of creed, who pass through the police courts. No matter what the offence or how often repeated, none are too young to be helped, no criminal too hardened. Almost every case undertaken means some expenditure. It costs money to provide boots, clothing, travel expenses and entrance fees to homes and institutions. This is a period of numerous charitable appeals but we doubt if any object is more worthy of support and more productive of lasting good.

To the majority of Cambridge people the policeman is a man in blue uniform who apprehends “undergraduates” who ride motor cycles with noisy “silencers". Some 300 of the town's most needy inhabitants however, saw “Robert” in the guise of a cheery soul on the occasion of the distribution of gifts from the proceeds of the Borough police poor and needy funds. Some carried sacks of potatoes on their shoulders, others struggled with sheets of paper in frenzied efforts to wrap meat into neat and really tidy looking parcels. P.C. Hagger who officiated as executioner in the meat department looked thoroughly impressive as with a sharp knife and large chopper he dealt with the meat in a way that would have done credit to the most finished meat purveyor.

Cook at the Cambridge workhouse ought to be a proud man, and probably is. The Christmas fare which he prepared for the inmates was announced to be delicious. Sausages were served for breakfast in honour of the occasion. All the other officers from the Master and Matron down have reason to the more than ever gratified at the results of their labours to make the inmates happy, and to bring within the walls of even such a dull place as most people imagine a workhouse to be, the real spirit of Christmas.

The satisfaction of the 18 men who spent Christmas at the Cambridge Church Army Home, Willow Walk may be summed up in the words of one of them – "a very nice time indeed - splendid". Their four course Christmas dinner included pork and beef and Christmas pudding. On Christmas Day they entertained themselves by playing and singing whilst on Boxing Day they were able to entertain friends. We saw two enjoying a game of billiards with oranges for balls!

A healthy sign of the times is shown in the fact that the parcels traffic at the Cambridge post office was a record one since the war. The public, as usual, did not take the hint to post early and the consequence was that most of the work had to the crowded into the 24th, which was a tremendous day for the staff. The regular staff worked magnificently and was augmented by temporary helpers secured through the Labour Exchange. A sad feature was that some 40 of these were engaged last year also and one does not like to think they have been unemployed during the whole of the year

The former Clocks and Gramophone Works at Huntingdon have been purchased by the firm of J. E. Hough Ltd of the Edison Bell Works, Peckham, and are to be opened early this year for the manufacture of gramophone records and wireless parts. Employment to between 300 and 400 hands will be given by this new industry. The factory has remained inactive for a year and the town has suffered as a result. It will be used for making the well known "Winner" records. Powerful engines still in the building will be made use of, but it will also be necessary to introduce additional steam power and heat

Sir - may I protest against the insanity and disgusting habit of indiscriminate spitting, and the inveterate noxious habit of dropping dirty pieces of paper and orange peel everywhere about the pavement? And will the police also take steps to deal with the unspeakable nuisance in our crowded streets of the inconsiderate pram driver, whether charging or dawdling, which are a public nuisance every day of the week and on Saturdays maddening. Why should not these vehicles, which tend by fashion to become more and more ponderous and bulky, be completely forbidden in the main streets and be relegated to the two feet of roadway below the kerb stones all times. - Pro Bono Publico

When he did not arrive Watson made inquiries at Marshall's garage at Jesus Lane and his car was bought by one of Marshall's mechanics.

Mr Hobson said the present state of houses in Comberton was deplorable. There were people living in two rooms, married couples with grown up sons and daughters practically herded together like sheep in a fold. It was not the better class of home that was required but the house suitable for a working man. It was not necessary to select the most expensive sites, right in the centre of the village, from where a labouring man often had to walk two miles to work

Cambridge must face the growing danger and disaster of its housing shortage. In our not very large town between 7 and 800 families are in immediate need of a house, not because they are unemployed, or very poor, or in any way unable to pay a fair rent, but because there are no houses for them to go into. Families are divided. The husband is here where his work lies, the wife and children are living elsewhere. Some dare not have children. Others have them and find that they are no longer welcome tenants. It is not easy for a young wife and mother to make good when her two rooms are rented and when the use of the kitchen, bathroom and lavatory by her family are looked upon as an intrusion.

Ely Urban District Council proposed to erect 10 houses at Prickwillow, where they were most urgently needed and 20 at Chief's Lane, Ely. The question arose as to the distance the houses would be set back from the road, taking into consideration the dust. Mr Laxton said tenants would rather have less front garden and more back to grow "taties".

The railway strike has now begun, and reduced services are everywhere being run. No Cambridge locomotive man has taken an engine out of the sheds this morning, said W Few, secretary of the local branch of ASLEF at their headquarters, the Kingston cafe, Mill road. “The whole of our members, with the exception of 2, have ceased to work and if any driver in the NUR of whom there are 20 at Cambridge, signs on duty, there is no firemen to work with him”. Councillor Gentle raised the question of the removal of the tram rails along King's Parade and Trumpington Street, Cambridge. He had had complaints, and their removal would give employment. Alderman Stanley said that if one was cycling along the Parade the rails made it most dangerous. The reason they were not taken up was because King's Parade was a new round, and it would be a waste of money to do it now. They desired to wait until the road needed substantial repair and then do the work.

At the County Council Miss Cochrane moved that the lark be included in the list of birds protected during the whole of the year. A Caxton farmer told her they did no harm, and yet a large number of them were caught every winter, and they were getting scarce. She believed they kept very much to their particular district and would not fly into other areas. Councillor Jackson said there was no doubt the larks which sang in the summer did little harm, but there was another kind of lark that came over in huge migratory flocks and did a great deal of damage. The greatest enemies of the birds are telegraph wires and snowstorms. The motion was lost

A particularly sad story was related to the Cambridge coroner when an inquiry was held into the death of an 18 year old student at Girton College. The girl, who was stated to be fond of rock climbing, attempted to ascend the Tower of the college with the intention of seeing an owls nest. Apparently she slipped and fell to the ground. From the injuries sustained to her legs she evidently alighted on her feet, which goes to prove that she hung on somewhere for a moment before she fell. Before she died she had said, "I so wanted to see the little owls".

The 203rd Field Company (Cambs) Royal Engineers celebrated their fifth reunion and dinner. In January 1915 the War Office had asked whether an engineering company could be raised in Cambridge. Great efforts were made but many of the youth had already joined other units. However a start in recruiting was begun and they were able to get a few men together. Their headquarters were in East road but when numbers began to increase they had moved to Ely, March, Whittlesey and afterwards Wisbech. They had no regular Engineer officer to take command of the unit but that grand old volunteer, Colonel Harding, although he was then nearly 70 years of age, undertook the job.

In the old days two gangs of lighters were at work, but since the board had taken the matter over nothing had been done. Who was responsible if there was a break? If we had another inch of rain we should have had the fens flooded. If there was 20 feet in of water in the river there was not a bank safe. They would soon be a million pounds in debt, if they had to pay compensation for damage done.

The renewal of the music and dancing licence of the Cambridge Co-operative Hall, was objected to on the grounds of noise. Burleigh Street was one of the most densely populated parts of the town. The hall was not originally built for dancing, it had a large number of windows and the dancing room was situated on the top floor of the highest building in the neighbourhood, with the result that the sound was dissipated considerably further.
